CHICAGO, July 12—Farmers would normally cause grain prices to plummet, but exceptionally bad weather in Europe has already damaged crops there and exports of American grain to that region are expected to increase sharply. This would hold the American grain market at its current high price levels despite the normal prospect of price-depressing surpluses.

As livestock feed, corn is the most important grain for producing beef, pork, poultry and dairy products. It also is in great demand overseas, including the Soviet Union, as livestock feed.

A combination of large crops and good market prices is expected to mean continued prosperity for most farmers and should be a political boon to President Ford — unless the months.

NEW YORK SLOWS POPULATION LOSS, STATISTICS SHOW

A Net Gain in Manhattan, Lower Brooklyn Outflow Cited by Census Bureau

By ROBERT REINHOLD
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 12—New figures compiled by the Census Bureau suggest strongly that New York City's precipitous population losses of the last few years may be coming to an end.

The Borough of Manhattan, the calculations showed today, has begun to gain population again, while the large declines suffered by Brooklyn and the Bronx have trailed off to a trickle.

Overall the city lost about 1 percent of its population a year from 1970 to 1974 on average, but only one-tenth of 1 percent from July 1, 1974, to July 1, 1975. As of the last census, in April 1970, the official count for the five boroughs of New York was 7,895,563. The population is now estimated at 7,567,800.

A Surprise to Officials

"The decrease has tapered off significantly—we were very surprised," said Fred Cavanaugh, who specializes in population estimates at the Census Bureau's population division. However, he cautioned that the new figures were still provisional and subject to some later correction.

Still the figures, based on indirect estimates derived from statistics thought to parallel population growth, were dramatic and startling enough to stir comment among population experts.

The figures show that the city as a whole lost only 9,800 residents during the one-year period, compared with nearly 80,000 a year in the first four years of this decade.

The new estimates are treated with some caution by demographers reluctant to proclaim a trend on the basis of just one year's experience. Moreover, the period covered does not reflect the time during which the city's financial crisis had its main impact.

Thousands of city workers have been laid off in recent months and many may have migrated elsewhere for work. The population estimates for the year ending July 1, 1976, will not be ready for another year.

Nevertheless, the new figures are likely to be a source of comfort for hard-pressed New York City and State officials, who have been trying to stem the tide of jobs and people toward the Southern and Western states—the so-called "Sunbelt."

Israelis Say Raider Impersonated Amin

By TERENCE SMITH
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, July 12—The Israeli units that rescued hijacking hostages from the Entebbe airport a week ago took with them a Mercedes officer with blackened face impersonating President Idi Amin of Uganda and two Land-Rovers full of men dressed as Palestinian bodyguards, according to Israeli sources.

The impersonation confused the Uganda soldiers at the airport and gave the Israeli raiding party a few extra seconds to reach the passenger terminal where the hostages and the crew of the hijacked Air France airliner were being held, the sources said.

The First Few Minutes

More details of this deception and of the extraordinary rescue are emerging only now, more than a week after the commandos succeeded in freeing the 103 hostages and flying them back to Israel. Some of the details are being reported abroad and some have been repeated in the newspapers here, attributed to foreign sources because of the restrictions of Israeli military censorship.

Perhaps the most dramatic tale concerns the first few minutes of the operation, when two or three Israeli Hercules C-130's landed quietly at the

U.S. SENDS FRIGATE TO KENYA IN SHOW

Also Provides Patrol Plane
Dispute With Uganda

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 12—The United States has sent a frigate and a Navy patrol plane to Kenya to a symbolic show of support for the East African nation in its dispute with neighboring Uganda.

A Pentagon spokesman said the frigate Beary, which has been in the Indian Ocean for the past month, arrived today at the Kenyan port of Mombasa in what officials described as a "courtesy port call."

In addition a Navy P-3 Orion, an antisubmarine warfare patrol plane, landed Saturday at the Nairobi airport, where it is expected to stay for a few days. It was the first landing in Kenya for one of the planes that are now patrolling the Indian Ocean from a base on the island of Diego Garcia.

Publicly, the Pentagon spokesman characterize both visits as routine, saying they had been scheduled long before tensions developed between Kenya and Uganda over the July 3 Israeli raid to rescue hostages being held by pro-Palestinian hijackers in Uganda. On the return trip, the Israeli planes stopped at the Nairobi airport, bringing up charges by Uganda of Kenyan

Baseball Contract nits Reserve System

By RAY CHASS
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, July 12—Owners and players agreed today on a new contract that gives the players a 10 percent raise in the first year of a new agreement.

The agreement, which is the product of months of some-what tentative negotiations, is the product of the Major League Baseball Players Association and the Player Reserve System, the negotiating body, appointed by the owners to free agent after six major league seasons, on the eve of the 1976-77 season.

Asked if the dispute that delayed the start of spring training last March and threatened to disrupt the season was over, Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association, said, "I believe so."

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, who remained on the sidelines during the negotiations, welcomed the agreement and said he would recommend its acceptance to the owners.

Pact Curbs Hertz, Avis and National

By ROBERT D. BERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 12—The Federal Trade Commission announced today an agreement with the nation's three biggest automobile rental companies prohibiting them from conspiring to monopolize the business or to fix prices anywhere in the United States.

The agreement came in three identical consent orders, which were won by the commission against the Hertz Corporation, Avis Rent-A-Car System Inc. and National Car Rental System Inc. The consent orders went considerably beyond the F.T.C.'s original charges, announced in June 1975, which

Hanoi Establishes Ties With Manila; Thailand Talks Set

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, July 12—In a major move to improve relations with its Southeast Asian neighbors, newly reunified Vietnam has agreed to establish diplomatic ties with the Philippines and to receive a Thai delegation next month to discuss normalization of relations, it was announced today.

The two actions constitute a major switch by Hanoi, which, until a month ago, was bitterly denouncing Thailand, the Philippines and the three other members of the Association of Asian Nations for being part of a "neocolonialist" organization controlled by the United States. The other members are Singapore, Malaysia and Indonesia.

Today's accord setting up diplomatic relations between Hanoi and Manila was signed in Manila by Pham Hien, Hanoi's Deputy Foreign Minister, who is on a good-will tour of Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and the Philippines.

Compromise Reached on Women's Role

By EILEEN SHANAHAN

A negotiating team of leading Democratic feminists won from Jimmy Carter yesterday what they termed acceptable commitments concerning the future role of women in the Democratic Party and in a Carter administration.

Mr. Carter also made peace yesterday with a group of 30 blacks that included several who had opposed him bitterly until the meeting. Among other things, Mr. Carter agreed to retain Basil A. Paterson of New York as vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee. (Page 26.)

Carter Ends Interviews on Running Mate

By CHARLES MOHR

Jimmy Carter completed his interviews with possible running mates yesterday and said he might reach a decision tonight.

A curtain was tightly drawn around the former Georgia Governor's own thinking and evolving preferences for the Vice-Presidential nomination, but it appeared that the small circle of political advisers closest to him believed Senators Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, 48 years old, and Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, 62, were both strongly in the running. Senator John Glenn of Ohio, 55, is also a serious possibility, political sources said, but they

was scheduled for this morning, at which a decision would be made on whether to accept the Carter commitments as the best arrangement that women can get at this time.

That was the course that was being urged by the most prominent and politically successful women in the party, both those who had been members of the negotiating committee, such as Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhattan, and those who had not, such as Representative Shirley Chisholm, Democrat of Brooklyn.

Thus, it appeared almost certain that the threatened fight on the convention floor over rules concerning the participation of women at the 1980 convention would be called off, although probably only after a heated discussion.

Mrs. Abzug, in reporting to the women's caucus on the results of the negotiations with Mr. Carter, said that she felt "our demands have been responded to in full."

However, the words that she reported Mr. Carter had agreed to reflected a compromise rather than a victory.

While it seemed apparent that the women had wrung more concessions from Mr. Carter than they would have gotten out of putting up a fight, it was was a night of oratory, not action, a night for new beginnings after more than a decade of Democratic discord.

The orator of the night and perhaps of the convention was the second keynote, the eloquent black Representative from Houston, Barbara Jordan, who said her presence on the podium showed "that the American dream need not forever be deferred."

When Miss Jordan appeared on the podium in a pale green dress, the Garden rocked with shouts and cheers for almost three minutes. When she began speaking, the chatter among the delegates subsided. And when she reached her punch lines, she was repeatedly applauded.

"Those of us who are public servants must set the example," said Miss Jordan, whose role in the House Judiciary Com-

White Moderates Cling To Hopes for Rhodesia

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

SALISBURY, Rhodesia—In a sprawling white-brick home in a southern suburb of Salisbury, a pregnant woman sat the other night at dinner idly picking over her food.

"I could leave tomorrow. I could just pack up and leave," she said, staring at her husband, a local businessman and prominent moderate here. "I want to have the baby and get out. I really do."

He looked at her and said evenly: "We just built this house. Where on earth can we go? England? South Africa? Look, what can we do?"

"What we can do is leave," she said. "Look, I'm just frightened, I'm scared."

It is an anxious and melancholy time for white moderates in Rhodesia, a minority within a minority, a resilient group that seeks, almost poignantly, to face the future with a tremor of optimism.

"So little future"

"We've got to be optimistic, there's no other way, but honestly there seems so little future, and one can't see ahead," said Tim Gibbs, a 37-year-old farmer who heads the moderate Rhodesia Party, the main white opposition to Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's Rhodesian Front.

"In my own family," he went on, "the three most highly qualified members have left—an insurance broker in London, a civil engineer in Teheran and a relative with a degree in agriculture who works in Vancouver. This is the real threat—the young people, the moderates, are leaving. It's the uncertainty more than anything else."

Although the key figure in the Rhodesian drama remains Mr. Smith—who insists that black majority rule is out of the question—a vocal and somewhat nervous set of white groups has emerged to counter the Prime Minister, to offer alternatives that seek eventual black majority rule, to play lonely, often frustrating roles.

Virtually all the white moderates are middle-class or wealthy. Many are young people whose parents or grandparents came here from England and Scotland and South Africa, elderly Rhodesians who firmly support Mr. Smith.

A Society Seen Doomed

By and large, the moderates say that present Rhodesian society—the paternalism toward and exploitation of blacks, the restricted voting, the laws that codify discrimination in land ownership, education, housing—is doomed and that most whites are aware of it but refuse to acknowledge it. What seems crucial for Rhodesia now, say the moderates, is an end to most discriminatory practices and a shift in political control in favor of blacks.

Black militants, themselves engulfed in power and tribal struggles, say that trying to erase racial discrimination toward Africans is irrelevant, a stalling tactic among whites to maintain control, since the crucial issue is rapid majority rule in a nation with six million blacks and 270,000 whites.

"The liberal leaders of the white community think that Africans are unhappy because of discrimination, but discrimination was removed there would be an end to violence and conflict," said Josiah Chinamano, leader of the African National Congress. "Well, it is too late now. It will not satisfy the aspirations of the Africans. Blacks want to rule this country, this is certain, and they want the power to make changes themselves. Power is the issue, not discrimination."

White moderates are, nonetheless, convinced that the reservoir of liberal white voters is surprisingly large in Rhodesia and that many whites would

There is no future for us if that political movement becomes involved," Mr. Reynolds continued. "Where would that leave us? Nowhere. We've got to get society right, but we've got to be accepted too."

It is evident, however, that the growing guerrilla war from the Mozambique border, the mobilization of Rhodesian white men that has frayed the economic and social fabric of the nation and the mood of uncertainty and bewilderment here is starting to take a heavy toll in an exodus of skilled white technicians, businessmen, architects and doctors.

Two weeks ago the Government announced a net loss of 1,520 "Europeans" from January to May, compared with a gain last year. The figure of skilled whites leaving is actually far higher since Rhodesia has had an influx of European laborers from Mozambique.

"Perhaps It's Too Late"

In the meantime a number of white businessmen have formed a group called the National Pledge that seeks to deal with some of the nation's most blatant discrimination. A church-supported group, the Catholic Commissions for Peace and Justice, has issued a controversial report about alleged mistreatment of Africans by security forces. Various white political figures have angrily denounced Mr. Smith's Rhodesian Front Government, which clearly has the support of many whites.

"Perhaps it's too late to do anything, it probably is," said Pat Bashford, a tobacco farmer, who launched a multiracial Center Party in 1968 in opposition to Mr. Smith.

"My black friends say, 'Pat, you're a good friend, we won't forget you.' Yes, they say that. They say that from their point of view there's no way forward but force, and, sadly enough, I tend to believe them. I just think it may be a little too late to do anything as far as white moderates are concerned."

 15 bodies.
 Only two nights ago, another tremor rumbled through the desolate sceoe and the villagers stayed awake all night, ready to flee once more to the safety of the jungle.
 According to the rescue workers, many of the survivors are suffering from pneumonia after living in the open for the last two weeks.
 Pieces of bark and straw were all that remained of the huts in which the villagers lived.
 A plane came in loaded with rice, tinned food, clothing and malaria pills. Thirty minutes after delivering its precious cargo, it took off again.
 "I have to do the same mission to other villages," the pilot said.
 Rain and mist that cling to the mountains have hampered relief efforts and pilots have to fly in and out during brief moments of visibility.
 One report from a rescue team at Nalka said a landslide had blocked the Kiriwa River, causing severe flooding in villages already devastated by the quake.

20,000 to Be Evacuated
 Colonel Hastjarjo said that 20,000 villagers would have to be evacuated to safer areas for fear of further land-slides. Their journey would take at least a week through dense jungle, crisscrossed with deep ravines.
 He said that so far nine Cessna light aircraft belonging to Mission Aviation Fellowship and two helicopters from Pertamina, the Indonesian state-owned oil company, were dropping food and medical supplies.
 Mission Aviation Fellowship, a missionary organization that runs a light aircraft service in the area, was the only relief agency able to offer help in the first few days after the earthquake.
 Dennis Stuessi, a local official of the mission, said one of the greatest problems was trying to contact frightened survivors who refused to leave the jungle.
 President Suharto, who declared the earthquake a national disaster, has appealed for an international relief effort. So far, Australia, Britain, the United States and West Germany have offered help.

 STOCKHOLM, July 12 (Reuters)—Hugo Blanco, the Peruvian leftist leader, said today that he had been arrested by Peru's military Government and expelled from his home country with no explanation.
 He said at a news conference here that the Peruvian authorities had imprisoned and interrogated him during a state of emergency. On Saturday, they gave him a one-way ticket to Sweden and put him on a plane at Lima Airport.
 "The political climate in Peru is hardening, there is oppression, living costs are rising and the workers are protesting," said Mr. Blanco, who returned to Peru nine months ago after living in exile for many years.

after a stop in Athens on June 27 and diverted it to Uganda.
Three hostages and seven terrorists were killed in the raid along with one Israeli officer and about 20 Uganda soldiers.
In his speech, Mr. Scranton conceded that the Israeli raid "involved a temporary breach of the territorial integrity of Uganda."
"However, there is a well-established right to use limited force for the protection of one's own nationals from an imminent threat of injury or death in a situation where the state in whose territory they are located either is unwilling or unable to protect them," Mr. Scranton declared.
The Western-sponsored rescue, which was introduced by Ivor Richard of Britain, offers the "need to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity" of all countries, and deplores "the tragic loss of life" that resulted from the hijacking of the French airliner.

Mr. Richard, the British delegate, said his Government demanded that the Uganda authorities give an accounting of the fate of Mrs. Dora Bloch, a 75-year-old hostage who was hospitalized in Kampala at the time of the raid and has not been located.
The strong probabilities are that she is now dead, the British delegate told the Council.
He also intervened later to report that the second secretary of Britain's High Commission in Kampala had been ordered out of the country with two other Britons and that threats were being made against British citizens. There are believed to be about 500 in Uganda.
West Germany and Sweden supported the two Western-powers' call for United Nations action to combat hijacking and Rüdiger von Weizsäcker, the West German delegate, said he would urge the General Assembly this fall to work out a treaty against the holding of hostages.

Mr. Scranton, in his statement, clearly supported the charge made last Friday by Chaim Herzog, the Israeli delegate, that there was complicity between the hijackers and the Uganda authorities. Uganda has denied the charge, insisting that President Idi Amin acted only out of "humanitarian considerations" and sought to protect the hostages.
"There is substantial evidence," Mr. Scranton told the Council, "that the Government of Uganda cooperated with and aided the hijackers."
He noted that the four guerrillas who commandeered the jetliner over Greece were joined by the Uganda aircraft by other pilots and given additional arms.

"The ease and success of the Israeli effort to free the hostages further suggests that the Uganda authorities could have overpowered the hijackers and released the hostages if they had really desired to do so," the United States delegate declared.
Mr. Scranton insisted that the Israeli Government had a clear duty to protect its citizens in mortal danger.
Referring to President Amin's statements, he noted that the only possibility of freedom for the Jewish hostages before the Israeli raid rested on a government head who had rejoiced at the slaying of members of Israel's Olympic team at Munich in 1972, who called for the extinction of Israel in a speech to the General Assembly. He praised the Israeli rescue mission, a combination of arms and that has surpassed "it electrical influence where, and I confess I am of them."

We were most honored by the royal visit and we now invite you to come view the special windows, the new Aquascutum Shop, the extraordinary Wedgwood and silver collections and more — all assembled for this memorable occasion.

On the Fourth Floor. A breathtaking special exhibition of Wedgwood, silver, rare historical documents and artifacts. The extraordinary Byron Barn collection of 18th century Wedgwood never before on public view. Many limited edition pieces of Wedgwood expressly commissioned by Bloomingdale's to commemorate our nation's bicentennial and the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. A bust of George Washington, one of ten limited edition replicas in black basalt of the 18th century original by Houdon. A collection of 17th and 18th century antique silver on loan from the New York Historical Society including the first English silver coins minted in America, 1652. The famous Paul Revere Liberty Bowl of sterling silver, a limited edition reproduction, the first of which was presented to the Queen. The entire display, presented against a backdrop of historical American flags and original documents of the Revolutionary period.

On the Fifth Floor. Our brilliantly conceived model rooms. Part of "Red White and Bloomingdale's", our bicentennial celebration. Reproduction furniture displayed with the antique originals that inspired the designs. The Blue Sitting Room: Leather-covered table and desk inspired by an original British military campaign chest. The Red Dining Room: Details inspired by Chippendale fretwork. And the Red, White and Blue living room, the classic Portsmouth Square collection. American reproductions inspired by 18th and 19th century English designs.

On the Third Floor. The American Classics boutique. A preview of fall fashion by our great American designers — Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, and Donna Karon and Louis Del Olio for Anne Klein and Co. And the newest fall fashions for young people, too — from kindergarten through college.

On the First Floor. The brand new Aquascutum Shop. Our complete collection of Aquascutum shirts and ties. And, nearby, a special selection of men's leather goods, also by Aquascutum. All created exclusively for Bloomingdale's.

Also on the First Floor. A display of 18th century menswear shoulder to shoulder with the styles of today. A highlight: the uniforms of British and American officers, 1776.

And don't miss our window displays all around the block. Every one a special tribute to this occasion. On Lexington Avenue, the best and newest in American and British fashion — Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein, Anne Klein, Aquascutum — against backgrounds of photo murals reproduced from the American Painting collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

U.S. Sends Warship and Plane to Kenya

complicity in the rescue mission.

Privately, however, Pentagon officials acknowledged that the visits were meant to show American support for Kenya in the war of words with Uganda.

In one of the periodic naval deployments in the Indian Ocean, an American task force of six ships headed by the carrier Ranger entered the Indian Ocean from the Western Pacific yesterday, headed in the general direction of East Africa. The expectation is that at least part of that force will make a port call at Mombasa.

A close relationship is developing between the United States and Kenya, one of the few nations on the East African coast to welcome visits by American warships. When Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld visited Kenya last month he arranged for a $70 million sale of 12 F-5 fighter planes to Kenya.

A Notice to Amin
Pentagon officials presumably hoped that the presence now of the American ship and planes would deter President Idi Amin of Uganda from taking any military action against the Kenyans.

At the same time Pentagon officials said they saw some indications that the tensions were easing. One encouraging sign, they said, was the telephone call that Field Marshal Amin made to an Israeli friend over the weekend to say that he was "finished with the terrorists" and to express admiration for the Israeli operation.

The disclosure that the patrol plane was based on Diego Garcia was the first acknowledgment by the Defense Department that the naval base on the small, British-owned island was now operational.

Over some opposition in Congress, the Defense Department began several years ago to turn the island facility, previously only a naval communications station, into a supply base capable of supporting naval and air operations. A main reason the military wanted the Diego Garcia base, aside from its support value for naval task forces operating in the Indian Ocean, was for projection of military power to East Africa or the Persian Gulf.

Kenya-Uganda Charges Fly

papers said today that Uganda troops were massing near the Kenyan border and that a Ugandan military mission had returned from Somalia with promises of assistance against Kenya.

The newspapers here also continued to report attacks by Ugandan soldiers on Kenyan citizens because of the Israeli raid, in which, President Amin has said, Kenya cooperated.

Meanwhile the Uganda state radio denied the "malicious fabrications" of the Kenyan press "that Uganda was building up troop strength along the border." The radio quoted a military spokesman as saying that these Kenyan reports were meant to cover up the "buildup of troops on the Kenyan side of the border, which has been going on since July 4"—the day of the Israeli operation.

Report of U.S. Planes
The Uganda radio also said Kenya had been supplied by the United States with reconnaissance bombers that are being flown by Americans and Israelis.

The Uganda military spokesman said visitors passing through Nairobi had reported that American and Israeli military men were "mixing freely" with Kenyan soldiers. He added that President Amin "has made it clear that Uganda will not attack Kenya despite provocations which include the harassment of trade that has caused a shortage of petrol in Uganda and the malicious campaign of hate in the Kenyan press."

Some months ago Kenya stopped shipping goods to Uganda on credit and demanded payment in advance, in hard currency. Uganda, which is

SPAIN CAUTIONED ON PRESS CONTROL

Journalist Warns Officials They Can't Manage News

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times
MADRID, July 12—Spanish officials are on notice that they can no longer manage the news with discreet telephone calls to the press.

Ricardo de la Cierva, a 49-year-old journalist and historian and an official himself a few years ago, put his foot down yesterday as few Spanish journalists have dared to do in the last 40 years. In his weekly column in the Madrid daily El País, he reported that three ministers of the present Government, in office since last Wednesday, had called newspapers to "interfere" in the publication of news articles.

"Gentlemen, this is going to stop because it is intolerable," he warned. "In each Sunday's column there will henceforth be published the name and circumstance of each person in power who indulges in interference of his kind."

A New Journalism
Mr. de la Cierva said a new journalism was being born in Spain but the three ministers "have not deigned to notice." He was presumably referring to the greater independence and aggressiveness being shown by the press, notably the weeklies since the death of Franco last November and the advent of a more liberal regime. El País has been showing some of the same independence in its editorials and news analyses.

Mr. de la Cierva was fighting a long ingrained tradition of press control, which was lightened in 1968 when formal censorship was abolished. But governments continued to have powerful weapons against the press, including the right to seize individual issues and to fine or suspend a publication for various offenses of a political or moral nature.

The telephone became an extralegal instrument of censorship, with ministers calling newspapers to forbid publication of certain items, to order publication of others or to suggest an editorial line or a manner of presenting the news.

The last Information Minister to serve under Franco, León Herrera Estaban, explained that telephoning was a manner of maintaining "dialogue" with the press. His explanation came after it became known that the ministry had called the morning newspaper Ya to demand that an article be lifted lest the whole edition be seized. The article was lifted.

Off the Record
Thus censorship continued but since it was a result of oral orders and not consisted in paper, it never became a matter of record that might later be held against the censor.

During the first government of the new monarchy, the volume of calls dropped markedly, mainly as a result of the liberalizing influence of the Minister of Information, Adolfo Martín Camero.

"I never received a single call from the ministry during the time the government lasted," an editor remarked. "The best you never hear from."

everything possible to make the arrival of their first units look like another visit by General Amin.

According to reports from Nairobi, the first American-built plane glided toward a quiet landing with its engines throttled back and braked to a stop rather than employing the noisy reverse thrust of the engines.

The plane came to a halt at a distant, darkened spot at the end of an old runway, well out of sight of the Ugandan guards near the terminal. As the big rear door dropped open, a black sedan bearing the same number plate as President Amin's official vehicle rolled out. Seated in the rear was a bulky, broad-shouldered Israeli commando dressed in the uniform of a Uganda field marshal and with his face blackened.

Behind came the two Land-Rovers painted in the buff camouflage color favored by Palestinian units. Ten Israeli commandos in the uniforms of Palestinian bodyguards were aboard, their Soviet-built Kalashnikov assault rifles at the ready.

President Amin apparently uses hired Palestinian bodyguards when he moves about Kampala because of doubts about the loyalty of his presidential guard.

As the motorcade moved into the floodlit area around the terminal, the Uganda guards posted along the runway snapped to attention. Some reportedly even saluted.

Exploiting the confusion, the Israelis were able to get within a few yards of the terminal before the first shots were fired. The Ugandas apparently discerned the ruse only when they realized that the men pouring out of the Land-Rovers were not Palestinians.

Israel apparently obtained up-to-the-minute intelligence on the airport situation from three sources.

The 150 hostages released in two batches by the hijackers on Wednesday and Thursday were interrogated by a special Israeli envoy who flew to Paris.

The second source, according to foreign reports, was a team of clandestine black agents friendly to Israel who managed to penetrate the airport.

The third source reportedly was aerial photographs, although no details are available on how or when they were taken. Israeli and American informants here deny that American satellite pictures were sought or received.

The operation was commanded by an Israeli military plane, a Boeing 707, circling Entebbe. This plane, which carried several army and air force commanders, also reportedly provided backup communication facilities.

A second Boeing 707 carrying two surgical teams and a 33-doctor medical team flew to the Nairobi airport and established a full field hospital in anticipation of a stopover there on the return trip.

A number of emergency surgical operations were performed during the stopover, and some of the more seriously wounded hostages were transferred to a Nairobi hospital.

The planes, with the rest of the hostages, took off as soon as they were able to refuel. Seven hours later they were back in Israel.

At least 20 Ugandans, three hostages and an Israeli officer, were killed during the raid.

ISRAELIS DETAINING

Special to The New York Times

TEL AVIV, July 12—Israel announced today that its security forces in the occupied West Bank of Jordan had smashed eight terrorist cells belonging to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Israelis hold the Popular Front, led by George Habbash, responsible for a series of hijackings, including the recent seizure of an Air France plane.

Military headquarters here said 50 suspects were detained "in recent weeks." Some of the prisoners were said to have been in custody previously.

An unofficial source said the prisoners included many intellectuals. The groups did not plan immediate acts of terror, but were organizing and supplying themselves for future operations, the source said.

The army said four more rings were exposed recently in Samaria and two more in the Tulkarm area. One group was said to have been responsible for gunfire at a bus taking Arab workers to jobs in Israel on March 28 as well as a grenade attack in Nablus on April 12, the day of mayoral elections in the occupied areas.

Loch Ness Expedition, Switching Tactics, to Try Sonar Gear to Find Monster

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

DRUMNADROCHT, Scotland, July 7—After many weeks of fruitless searching, the scientists here have switched their emphasis from underwater photography to sonar research in an effort to explain the legendary phenomenon known as the Loch Ness monster.

Most of the complex photographic equipment that preoccupied members of the Academy of Applied Science and New York Times Loch Ness expedition in the early stages has been taken out of the water. The effort now is to obtain a more precise "fix" on animal life in the loch. The cameras will go back in.

"This is a temporary phenomenon," says Dr. Harold E. Edgerton, professor emeritus at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a member of the team. "The ultimate objective is still to get a picture. But we haven't had much luck with the cameras, so we're moving to sound systems to try to locate the animals."

Charlie Finkelstein of Klein Associates of Salem, N.H., studies sonar printout on a cabin cruiser on Loch Ness.

The team is that sea life may have been frightened rather than attracted by the underwater cameras and powerful strobe lights that illuminated the murky water.

'Trace' on the Paper

Dr. Edgerton had originally thought that the rig would act as "bait." That view received some reinforcement on June 30, when Mr. Wyckoff's wife, who was watching the sonar scanner, saw a large "trace" on the paper. The trace moved within 80 yards of the floating platform, paused for several minutes, then moved away. No boats were in the area at the time.

Since the "monster" will not come to the platform, the scientists have decided to move the platform to the "monster." The platform was towed out another 80 yards, and the time-elapsed camera, which takes a picture every 22 seconds, was turned on.

"Actually, we are still operating on bounces," says Dr. Edgerton. "When one thing doesn't work, we'll try another."

There are two parts to the sonar operation. One is Dr. Edgerton's "fixed" sonar, which sits a few feet offshore and beams impulses toward the floating research platform and beyond. It is this system that produced the suggestive "tracings" in recent days. The other is on the expedition's 33-foot cabin cruiser, the Malaran, which has been "trolling" with a side-scan sonar "fish" developed by Klein Associates of Salem, N.H. This operation, run by Dr. Christopher McGowan, a zoologist with the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto, has been enlivened by the arrival of Martin Klein, a sonar expert and the company's president, and Charlie Finkelstein, an associate and diver.

Their hope has been to find bones or fossil formations that can be explored later by divers or deep-water cameras. Mr. Klein says he has located one interesting formation at a depth of about 350 feet and, as a by-product, has discovered what appears to be a series of man-made stone circles lying in about 35 feet of water near the northern end of the loch. Dr. Rines thinks these may have archeological significance. They resemble stone cairns found in the hills that are thought to be products of earlier civilizations.

Other developments have kept the team busy despite the absence of spectacular results. The camera equipment has been shifted from the Hunter, a narrow 23-foot boat, to the much roomier platform, which was constructed by Tony Gerlings, a local resident, and is now anchored about 400 feet off shore.

Meanwhile, George C. Newton Jr., a professor of electrical engineering at M.I.T., arrived with infra-red equipment borrowed from the Magnavox Corporation. He will test the equipment and, if it works, hopes to install permanent infra-red devices to monitor the lake's surface at night.

Another expedition, sponsored by the National Geographic Society, has arrived with sophisticated photographic, sonar and diving equipment. The society's operating base is a trawler called the Corsair that is anchored near the Rines expedition's platform.

"We regard them as colleagues rather than competitors," says Dr. Edgerton. And Mr. Rines said that the two teams planned to exchange information.

The society's team, not surprisingly, includes several men who have known Dr. Edgerton and Mr. Wyckoff for years. Their backgrounds and some of their equipment are more or less interchangeable.

Among the newcomers with the National Geographic team is Sam Raymond, president of Benthos Corporation, which donated the two stereo cameras to the Rines expedition, and an expert on deep-sea photography.

An accomplished clarinet player, Mr. Raymond provided part of the musical accompaniment for an impromptu five-and-a-half-hour march July 4 by members of both teams. And some nights he sits on the Corsair playing a few sweet and mournful solos, as if to summon the creature that has so far eluded the expedition's undiscouraged monster-seekers.

Unexplained Movements

In recent days, printouts from a sonar scanner situated inside the team's lakeside equipment shed have recorded many unexplained movements by objects that create a strong signal and move to within 50 to 80 yards of the expedition's floating research platform, a square barge several hundred feet from the shore.

These sonar "pictures" have had two effects. One is to keep up the morale of the team, whose frustrations have been many and whose daily routine, except for an impromptu July 4 celebration, has been at once arduous and unproductive.

"All this sonar work has been a big boost," says Robert H. Rines, leader of the expedition who plans to continue the search through the summer.

The other has been to persuade the team to change its tactics. Until a few days ago, the team continued to hope that its complex battery of underwater cameras—including several 35-millimeter stereo cameras, an underwater Polaroid SX-70, and a television camera linked to a viewing monitor inside the shed—would produce results.

high-speed photography. "The other one showed what looked like an eel. For a few days, the most exciting thing that happened around here was the debate on whether it was in fact like an eel."

One explanation offered by a side-scan sonar "fish" developed by Klein Associates of Salem, N.H. This operation, run by Dr. Christopher McGowan, a zoologist with the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto, has been enlivened by the arrival of Martin Klein, a sonar expert and the company's president, and Charlie Finkelstein, an associate and diver.

Political Motive Charged

The major argument is over the size and nature of the levy that will be applied to taxpayers to pay for the program. But the Government has charged that the strike was politically motivated, constituting a move by Labor supporters to embarass the Liberal and National Country parties. The strike halted all scheduled domestic flights and international flights. It reduced electricity supplies and curtailed deliveries of a basic commodities such as milk and bread. Many teachers turned up for work despite a strike call by their union, but large numbers of pupils were absent because school buses were not operating.

India Lifts Passport Of Emigre Critical Of Gandhi Policies

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

The Indian Government has lifted the passport of Srikumar Poddar, a wealthy Michigan businessman and publisher of Indian birth, who has been critical of recent policies of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

Mr. Poddar, who is an Indian citizen permanently resident in the United States, was notified of the action in a letter he received yesterday signed by P. H. Desai, first secretary of the Indian Embassy in Washington. No reason was given.

In Washington, a press spokesman for the Indian Embassy said that it had received instructions from New Delhi to have Mr. Poddar surrender his passport "in the public interest." The spokesman said that this was the first time that the Government had invalidated the passport of an Indian resident of the United States.

In a telephone interview from his home in East Lansing, the 38-year-old Mr. Poddar said: "It is shameful that the Indian Government now finds it necessary to stifle dissent abroad. I am honored to be the first Indian citizen in America to have that distinction."

Last year, Mr. Poddar helped found Indians for Democracy, an organization set up to protest restrictions in their homeland resulting from the state of emergency proclaimed by the Government of Mrs. Gandhi.

Several years ago he had been active in raising more than $1 million to help refugees from East Pakistan. In 1974, he started the International Students Foundation to assist foreign students facing financial hardship as a result of a decision by the United States Government prohibiting them from accepting summer employment because of job shortages for young Americans.

Mr. Poddar said yesterday he was sending a cablegram to Mrs. Gandhi to demand a personal explanation of why his passport had been lifted. He said he would confer with his lawyers to determine whether he could take legal action.

BRITAIN IS CRITICAL OF ANGOLAN TRIAL

LONDON, July 12 (Reuters) — Britain said today that the recent trial of foreign mercenaries in Angola had not been fair and expressed shock and dismay at the execution of four of the convicted men on Saturday.

"Although certain rights were accorded to the defense by the court, our conclusion is that the trial was not a fair trial in the sense in which we would understand that term," said Edward Rowlands, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, in a statement to Parliament.

"We have noted the absence of any presumption of innocence and the prejudicial nature of much of the process and evidence," he said.

LISBON, July 12 (AP) — Senator Charles McC. Mathias Jr. left for the United States today after efforts to get the body of the executed American mercenary, Daniel Gearhart, back from Angola were snaggled. The Maryland Republican said the United States Embassy here would arrange for the body to be flown home.

WASHINGTON, July 12 — The State Department declined today to provide further information about diplomatic efforts to stave off the execution of Daniel Gearhart, despite a pledge Saturday by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger that more information would be forthcoming.

OF MAN

Hanoi will receive a Thai delegation was made by the Vietnam News Agency. It quoted a note from Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh in reply to his Thai counterpart, Pichai Rattakul, who was said to have taken the initiative. "If the Thai side really wants to have friendly and good neighborly relations with Vietnam," Mr. Trinh said, Hanoi is "prepared to resume talks with the Thai Government."

An original round of talks on establishing relations was broken off last summer after several acrimonious attacks by the Vietnamese on Thailand over the continued presence of United States bases there and the refusal of the Thais to return planes flown to Thailand by refugees from Vietnam.

Hanoi's sudden shift to a more moderate policy may also be related to other factors, analysts believe. One is the recent step-up in Hanoi's verbal battle with Peking over the oil potential of the Spratly and Paracel Islands in the South China Sea, for which Hanoi may want to obtain support.

Then there are signs that both the Philippines and Thailand are acting to reduce the American military presence in their countries, the Thais by closing down all United States military bases, the Philippines by their demands in current negotiations for sovereignty over United States bases in the islands.

No Sign of Change Toward U.S.
So far there has been no indication that Hanoi, the capital of the reunified North and South, has changed its position on relations with the United States. Since the end of the war last year, the Vietnamese have been insisting that Washington first accept their demand for postwar aid based on American obligations under the 1973 Paris peace agreement.

Hanoi's new move toward improved relations with its Southeast Asian neighbors contrasts strongly with its recent turn toward a much tougher internal policy toward the old South Vietnam.

In his speech to the new National Assembly last month Le Duan, the country's ranking leader, reversed a stand that he and other senior Vietnamese had taken over the last year. He announced that henceforth the south must move "rapidly, vigorously and steadily to socialism" along with the north.

Agriculture—there has reportedly been little attempt to carry out land reform since the Communist victory last year—will now be quickly collectivized, Mr. Le Duan said.

Moreover, he warned that the Government will "rapidly do away with the bureaucratic and militarist comprador bourgeoisie"—an apparent allusion to native agents for exploitative foreign interests—"as well as all vestiges of the feudal landlord class" in the south. Though he and other Vietnamese leaders had said earlier that private businesses would be allowed to continue in the south because of its different conditions, "it is necessary to effect socialist transformation of private capitalist traders," he said in the speech to the Assembly.

This will require sacrifices from southerners, the leader added: "Those people in the south who, as a result of the United States imperialist war of aggression, had attained a living standard much too high for the country's economy and their own working capacity, should understand that this prosperity was a sham one, the cost of which was misery and death for millions of their countrymen."

More Re-Education Due

There are indications that Hanoi has begun this new tough policy in the south. Last month a Government directive announced that former South Vietnamese Army officers, policemen, civil servants and politicians who are still in re-education camps would have to stay for a minimum of three courses. No official figures have been released on how many such people are still in those camps, but one official in Saigon indicated to a correspondent last spring that there were about 200,000.

It has become increasingly difficult to check on developments in the south. A handful of foreign reporters still in Saigon were expelled last May and Vietnamese working for Western news agencies were ordered to stop filing dispatches. Last week the last group of 20 foreign priests in the south were put on a plane to Bangkok. Analysts here believe this shift to a harder attitude toward the south may reflect Hanoi's difficult experience in South Vietnam over the last year.

There has been continued sporadic armed resistance, but the more serious problems have been high unemployment and inflation, petty thievery, corruption and prostitution and the unwillingness of many people, accustomed to a relatively high standard of living in Saigon, to move to the countryside.

Some analysts feel that Hanoi's tough new line toward the south was reflected in its appointments 10 days ago to the unified government. Virtually all power was left in the hands of former officials of North Vietnam.

Only a few, relatively unimportant posts went to southerners formerly identified with the National Liberation Front or the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam.

Eagle 20's are a new cigarette that cost five cents less a pack and fifty cents less a carton than anything you're smoking now.

Eagle 20's are made from rich, mellow tobacco—its quality is comparable to a Marlboro or Winston.

The reason they cost less is that we're willing to make a little less on every pack, we sell.

That's why we've suggested to all our customers that Eagle 20's sell for 5¢ less than standard pack prices.

In the long run we think we'll sell more packs that way.

12 airlines can fly you from New York to Tehran.

Only one can fly you non-stop. Iran Air.

Think of it. No stops in cities you don't want to stopover in. No plane changes. No delays. Just one smooth flight from JFK to Tehran in one of our new 747SP's. A flight that puts you in Tehran at least 4 hours faster than any other direct flight!

You leave at 8:00PM and arrive early the next afternoon. In lots of time to check into your hotel, have a leisurely dinner and a good night's rest. So you're alert for business the next day.

The only 747SP's on the North Atlantic. Although on the North Atlantic only a year, Iran Air is first with the new 747SP (SP for special performance).

It flies a mile higher than other 747's. That means a smoother flight. With about 100 fewer seats, you enjoy more intimate service. And our new lounge in first class is something nobody should miss. It's Persian and opulent. We call it our Persian Room—the newest, plushiest nightspot in town.

More than one flight a day from JFK.

Besides our new 747SP flights, we've a new expanded 707 schedule. You can depart any day of the week, with a choice of two flights on Thursdays and Sundays. Some go via London, some via Paris. All are direct so you never change planes.

In addition, we have immediate connections to Isfahan and Shiraz, plus convenient connections to other Persian Gulf states and the Far East.

Pact Reached on European Parliament

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times
BRUSSELS, July 12—Common Market government heads reached tentative agreement tonight on how to distribute seats in a new, directly elected European Parliament.

It had taken the government chiefs months of argument to come out with a last-minute compromise figure, in what has become the traditional Brussels pattern of haggling down to the wire. But the agreement, which the British House of Commons is expected to endorse without difficulty, was hailed as "a new impetus for the European Community, which will get things into motion again," as a West German spokesman put it.

The new Parliament's power will, initially at least, be no greater than those of the existing Parliament, which is little more than a debating society. It would take an amendment of the Common Market's basic Treaty of Rome to turn it into something more like a legislature.

The eight Prime Ministers and the President of France discussed a series of minor variations on a formula that would have enlarged the existing nominated Parliament to about 400 seats. They were about to recess once again when Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany banged the table, his spokesman said, and declared, "No, we have to get on with it."

Same Number For Big 4
The ultimate compromise allotted 81 seats each to the four largest countries—West Germany, Italy, Britain and France; 25 to the Netherlands, 24 to Belgium, 16 to Denmark, 15 to Ireland, and six to Luxembourg, for a total of 410.

This meant that the large countries eased their insistence on a near-proportionality of representatio that would come close to one man, one vote, and the smaller ones gave a little on their demand for added national weight regardless of size. There is a difference of nearly 9 million in the population of the biggest—West Germany—and the least populous of the big four—France.

The deadlock on the distribution of seats had been holding up definite scheduling of the elections, set for spring of 1978. Now it will be up to each country to decide how it will organize constituencies and voting, and whether European Parliament members must, may or may not also be members of national legislatures. At present, all members of the 98-seat Parliament are national deputies, appointed by their home parliaments.

Popular Stake Sought
The drive for direct elections has been advanced for years as an important way to restore popular momentum to the bureaucracy-dominated Common Market, and to give the European man in the street a new sense of having a stake in the community's future.

European integrationists hope that the elections will lead to institutional change that could revive the dream of a United States of Europe, while others, such as France's Gaullists, who resist integration, tend to dislike the plan of direct elections for just that reason.

The general idea of a formula that would double the existing number of seats had been agreed upon by the British, the French and the West Germans before today's session of European Council, the regular meeting of government chiefs.

Some of the smaller countries considered that this smacked too much of the directorate that President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing of France had proposed, and they came up with an assessment of changes although they did not challenge the essentials of the compromise.

Regional Issue in Britain
In the current 198-member assembly, the big four have 36 seats each, the Netherlands and Belgium have 14 each, Denmark and Ireland have 10 each, and Luxembourg has six. This ratio gave the smaller countries delegations far out of proportion to their relative populations, and for a variety of internal political reasons, it was not acceptable to the big countries for a directly elected parliament.

For Britain, the key problem was the new regional demands of Scotland and Wales, which insisted that they should have at least as many deputies of their own as the less populous countries of Ireland and Denmark.

Even the needs of Northern Ireland became a sticking point. It was calculated as the state leaders debated that if Britain had 30 seats, as one proposal suggested, Northern Ireland would probably elect two Protestants. With 81, Northern Ireland could get three deputies and one would probably be a Roman Catholic.

France, on the other hand, is not eager to emphasize the role of its native regions, and wanted to keep the total size of the new Parliament somewhat smaller.

Hugh Scott Sees Chiao HONG KONG, July 12 (Reuters)—Foreign Minister Chiao Kuan-Hua of China had talks in Peking today with Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Hsinhua Press Agency reported.

Seven Killed, Two Injured as Gunman Sprays Shots at College in California

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, July 12 — Seven persons were killed and two were seriously injured today when a 37-year-old janitor entered the basement of a college library and, methodically going from room to room, opened fire with a .22-caliber automatic rifle, the police said.

The shooting occurred on the Fullerton campus of California State University, a modern, 225-acre college lined with trees 25 miles south of Los Angeles.

Shortly after the shooting, policemen went to a Hilton Inn Hotel out far from the college and arrested Edward C. Alloway of Anaheim, a college employee. Friends described him as a likable man, a "loner" who had been brooding during the last few days because of difficulties with his wife. He was held on a murder charge at the Fullerton jail.

All of those killed were employees of the college. They were Seth Fessenden, professor emeritus of speech; Stephen L. Becker, 32, a son of the college's director of placement, who was employed at the school; Paul F. Herzberg, a college photographer; Bruce A. Jacobson, an audio-visual technician; Donald Arger, 41, a custodian; Debra Paulsen, 25, a custodian; and Frank Teplansky, 51, a graphics department employee.

About 5,000 students are attending summer sessions at the college but relatively few people were in the basement of the six-story library when the shots rang out this morning.

According to witnesses, a man carrying a rifle suddenly appeared in the basement shortly before 7 A.M. in an area of special-purpose activity rooms, containing audiovisual aids and special library facilities.

The assailant, said the witnesses, then went from room to room, leading his rifle as he went along, apparently firing indiscriminately, although it was not immediately established whether the gunman had in fact consciously selected his victims beforehand.

Some witnesses said the rapid fire of the weapon reminded them of a machine gun in a war movie, although others reported hearing only a "popping" noise that did not alarm them.

"Nobody believed they were gunshots," said Demetra Bailey, a 14-year-old Fullerton girl who was on the campus to attend an Upward Bound summer training program. "We all thought it was firecrackers."

Richard Corona, who was a coordinator of this program, said that when he heard the initial shots, he went into a hallway to investigate.

He said that a short, stocky man whom he described as "looking like an all-American boy," brushed past him from a room where Mr. Corona could see 22 caliber cartridges strewn about the floor.

Mr. Corona said the man said: "He doesn't belong here; he doesn't belong here." Theo, he said, the man aimed a rifle at Mr. Corona and another Upward Bound counselor, Marcia Martinez, who had gone into the hall.

A moment passed. Then without saying anything, the man lowered the gun and ran in the opposite direction. Soon, Mr. Corona said, firing started again. "There was one bullet after another," he said.

Mr. Corona said he went into a library room where 15 students were working and shouted: "Everybody has to get out of here; there's a crazy guy loose with a gun." But, he said, "Nobody would listen to me."

Meanwhile, people who had been walking quietly in the warren of basement rooms or were walking along corridors were cut down by the fire. Two of the victims staggered outside of the building, but died there; the others lay inside the library.

The employees who were injured were Maynard Hoffman, 65, a custodial supervisor and Donald Karan, an associate librarian.

Mr. Alloway, who had worked for the college since May, 1975, was arrested at a hotel where his wife was employed, and one police official said he believed that he had been pleading with her for a reconciliation.

Amol Navarro, chief custodian at the university, said that Mr. Alloway was "a quiet type; whenever he went on a break, he would go alone and he never seemed to eat lunch with anyone but he did his work and he had a good attendance record. He's clean cut, and you never heard him cuss, or blame something that was wrong on someone else," Mr. Navarro said.

He said that Mr. Alloway had seemed depressed the last few days. "He had a problem," he said. "He told me he had a family problem, and the last two days he worked, he was awful hard to get along with."

Introducing Fact. The low gas, low 'tar'

Chances are, you've never heard gas and cigarettes mentioned together before. Just 'tar' and nicotine. According to some critics of smoking, gases are part of the controversy too.

You see, smoke is mostly gas. Different kinds of gas. And despite what we tobacco people think, these critics say it's just as important to cut down on some of the gases as it is to lower 'tar' and nicotine.

No ordinary cigarette can do it. But Fact can. Fact is unique, the first cigarette with a revolutionary Purite filter. And Fact reduces gas concentrations at the same time it reduces 'tar' and nicotine.

Meaning you get low gas and low 'tar.' Together. But that's not all. Take a minute to read our pack. It tells you how Purite makes this the first low 'tar' smoke with good, rich taste.

Taste as good as Marlboro. And that's a Fact.

fact:

Fact is the first cigarette with Purite granules, the selective filtering agent. Selective. That means it reduces things that taste bad in smoke. Without removing the things that taste good. So, for the first time, you get a taste you can like in a low 'tar' cigarette. And that's a fact.

Available in regular and menthol

Harris Testifies Last-Minute Decision by Miss Hearst Saved Heiress From Death in Gun Battle

denim slacks and a blue print. She said that Miss Hearst was the last person they would have taken with the that day if they had anticipated any trouble.

"She was the least experienced of us all," said Mrs. Harris of her absent co-defendant. She continued: "I think you will agree it is only common sense that she could not be a heiress one day and a trained commando the next, as so many people have been fond of characterizing her."

"The evidence will show that Patricia Hearst was going through a process of change in which she was in some middle ground feeling that she couldn't go back to what she felt was her former meaningless life but, at the same time, she could not be considered a revolutionary either because convictions and commitment of that level of seriousness don't come quickly or easily."

The jurors kept their eyes riveted on Mrs. Harris, never stopping to pick up their pencils to jot down a note on pads provided for them. They seemed wide-eyed as Mrs. Harris, one of the last remaining members of the S.L.A., said that the reason the group had carbines, ammunition and clothing in their van was that they intended to move that day to a motel in the Hollywood Hills.

"This may strike you as strange if you have never lived a tumultuous kind of life as if on the edge of a precipice, but those who remained at the house felt the situation there was very precarious. We could not be sure that our friends would still be [at the house] when we returned," she said.

In his opening statement, Samuel Mayerson, the prosecutor, described the events of May 16 and May 17. He said that Miss Hearst's shots at the store had almost killed an employee. He said that witnesses would testify that Miss Hearst and the Harris' had stolen automobiles at gunpoint and had abducted two-car owners.

Both Mrs. Harris and Leonard Weinglass, her attorney, said they would not dispute the facts. Mr. Weinglass told the panel of seven women and five men that in the main the witnesses would all be telling the truth.

What is at issue, Mr. Weinglass said, is whether those facts added up to a case that the prosecution could prove beyond a reasonable doubt. For example, he said that in taking the cars, the Harris' never meant to "permanently deprive" the owners of their property as the law says the state must prove. The cars, he said, were "borrowed," simply for the purpose of escape, and were returned.

If the jurors agree, he said, they must acquit on the robbery charges. Hearing that one of the jurors, an officer in an insurance company, raised his eyebrows as if in surprise.

Superior Court Judge Mark Brambler recessed the trial early today so that defense lawyers could visit the sporting goods store to gather information for their case. However, the judge rejected the Harris' request that they, too, be allowed to visit the scene.

He cited a sheriff's report that contended that the trip created a "hazardous security problem." But defense lawyers argued that Miss Hearst had been allowed, along with her judge, jury and lawyers, to visit the two apartments in San Francisco where she said she had been held an S.L.A. prisoner.

Head of Harlem Project Resigns in Control Dispute

By CHARLAYNE HUNTER

Jack E. Wood Jr., president of the Harlem Urban Development Corporation since it was established five years ago, has submitted his resignation in a dispute over how deeply the board of directors should be involved in the administration of the agency.

Mr. Wood's resignation comes at a time when members of the board have taken steps to establish greater independence from the parent agency, the State Urban Development Corporation, and to insure the local agency's continued existence.

The agency was established in 1971 in an effort to involve a broad cross-section of Harlem representatives in directing the efforts of the Urban Development Corporation in the redevelopment of Harlem.

Its board was made up of ministers, politicians, local businessmen and community activists.

Apparently Mr. Wood was in accord with the moves toward independence and autonomy, which he described in his June 14 letter of resignation as "a long overdue need to effect such change."

But the letter, addressed to the chairman, Judge Herbert B. Evans, went on to criticize the board for attempting to exclude him from vital administrative decisions.

Mr. Wood said that "a majority of the board appears to be equally determined to assume full responsibility for all matters involving program operations, personnel, administration and finance, while excluding, at the same time, the effective participation of its chief executive in such vital decisions."

The agency head, formerly executive director of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, a private group that works at opening housing opportunities for minorities, described such procedures as being "at variance with the basic tenets of effective management," and said that they "would not be acceptable to me."

Hope Stevens, a member of the board and a lawyer, said that the majority of the board had not had an opportunity to consider Mr. Wood's resignation.

Mr. Stevens said that many of the members felt that Mr. Wood's letter of intent "had left the door open to reconsideration if the circumstances were interpreted differently."

"He was an excellent administrator," Mr. Stevens said of Mr. Wood, "even though his posture was of more loyalty to downtown U.D.C. than to the community board."

A Vote for Resignation However, the Rev. James Gunther, the board's treasurer, said that at a meeting scheduled for today to discuss the matter, he would accept Mr. Wood's resignation "with great reluctance."

"We are not going to function as a rubber stamp for downtown," Mr. Gunther said, "and I don't see him being any happier if he stays."

Senator Carl H. McCall, who also serves on the board, said that Mr. Wood's resignation followed a "growing sense of dissatisfaction" on the part of the board members with his leadership.

While Mr. Wood was credited with a major study of and a 10-year redevelopment plan for the Harlem area—one of the most comprehensive of its kind to date, Mr. McCall said that "nothing is happening in Harlem now because of Mr. Wood's failure to move the agency forward."

"One of the most critical things we've got to face now is housing and economic development," he said. "With money, technical experience and community support, H.U.D.C. is the only agency in Harlem that can do that on a large scale."

Despite the fact that Mr. Wood's resignation does not become effective until the middle of August because of an accumulation of vacation leave, his last day in the office was July 9.

Further, while several names have been discussed by board members as possible successors to Mr. Wood, several board sources indicated that John Edwards, now head of the Mayor's Planning Office in Harlem, was the leading contender.

Rep. Howe's Pleas Denied; Trial Cleared for Monday

SALT LAKE CITY, July 12 (AP)—A City Court judge today denied defense motions that the sex-solicitation charges against Representative Allan T. Howe be dismissed on grounds of alleged entrapment and misconduct by the prosecution.

Judge Raymond Udo's action cleared the way for the Utah Democrat to go on trial next Monday, unless there are additional delays.

Mr. Howe sat silently at the defense table. His wife, Marlene, was nearby. They did not talk to reporters.

26 Family Agencies Get a New Home

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

With little fanfare, and almost no publicity, the city yesterday opened a 12-story $29 million building that will house the Family Court and various agencies that deal with it.

File cabinets and cartons huddled in making tape were in the lobby of the building yesterday on the first day of business, which comes after seven years of design, planning and construction. The building, at 60 Lafayette Street, is geared to hold 25 agencies that deal with the family and children, according to an announcement by Mayor Beame.

"For the first time in the history of jurisprudence," the Mayor said in a statement, "a building has been designed to incorporate all the governmental support facilities and programs that directly deal with the family."

In the building itself, employees reported that things were still a little unsettled as the staff moved into its offices over the weekend. "It's confusing," said Norma Rosario, the receptionist. "I'm supposed to give out information, but I don't know much information to give out."

A City Hall aide said Mr. Beame would tour the building next week.

The building is a dark marble and granite structure designed by Eaines Lundberg & Washlet, architects. It was commissioned in 1969.

It contains courtrooms, waiting rooms, judges' private chambers, a law library and psychological and psychiatric testing and treatment facilities.

Joseph Williams, administrative judge of the Family Court, called it "a giant step forward in the administration of justice for the family, the child and the parent."

The building brings together facilities that were on East 23d Street, at 80 Centre Street and at other sites scattered throughout the city, some of them leased from private landlords. There have been delays in the opening of the building for several months, until after the city had been given permission by the Emergency Financial Control Board to hire custodial help.

New York City's Population Losses Are Slowed

another couple of years, it would certainly indicate a dramatic change," said John Smith, a policy planning official with the Economic Development Board in Albany.

Just why New York's population seems to be stabilizing is not clear. However, similar population estimates indicate that the growth of the Sunbelt states, while still very great, has slowed in the last year or two, possibly because of the stagnant economy. It may be that fewer people are migrating for the moment.

"It is possible the Sunbelt trend is subsiding somewhat," said Mr. Cavanaugh of the Census Bureau.

The new figures are based not on actual headcount, which will not be done again until 1980, but on sophisticated estimates derived from birth and death statistics, school enrollment, Medicare records, construction permits, electric meter connections and other data thought to reflect closely changes in population.

The shift was most dramatic in the case of Brooklyn, the largest borough. It lost 157,000, or 6 percent, of its residents from 1970 to 1974, but only 9,800 in the 1974-1975 period.

Manhattan, which had also been losing heavily, actually grew, by 9,800.

The Bronx continued to lose population during the year — by 13,500 — but the rate of loss was much reduced. Queens, whose population has been about static since 1970, gained marginally — 3,700. Staten Island, the only borough that has not suffered a net loss since 1970, grew further (4,400) but not as fast as it did before.

New York State as a whole also gained slightly (21,000) reversing several years of decline. The state population now stands at 18,123,000, down 118,000 from 1970.

The new estimates disclosed no changes in the growth patterns of New York City's suburbs. The close-in counties of Nassau and Westchester continued to decline slightly, while Suffolk, Putnam and Rockland Counties continued to grow at roughly the same rates they have for several years.

State and city officials are always sensitive to population shifts because revenue sharing and countless other programs that provide Federal money and services are based largely on population. While New York City has lost heavily in recent years — a net loss of 4.3 percent since 1970 — it has by no means been the fastest shrinking major city in the country.

St. Louis, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Atlanta, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Philadelphia have all been losing at a higher rate.

The new census report, titled "Estimates of the Population of New York Counties and Metropolitan Areas: July 1, 1974 and 1975" (Current Population Reports Series P-25, No. 631), is available for 35 cents from the Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

What do new jobs for Americans mean to you... a taxpayer?

Example: consider a married man with one child, living in Pennsylvania, who earned $200 a week before he lost his job.

Taking that man off unemployment and putting him on our payroll—even at the lowest-pay entry job—would result in a switch of about $7,900 a year, from an economic "minus" to an economic "plus!"

He'd earn about $11,000 a year. And instead of the state and federal governments (all of us taxpayers!) paying him more than $5,900 in unemployment compensation, he'd be paying the government more than $1,970. About $1,000 in Federal income tax, and more than $970 in other payroll taxes, including social security and state and local income taxes.

Whether you look at it in social and humanitarian terms, or as a matter of cold economic reality, it comes out the same. The private sector—business—must maintain jobs and create new ones. And that means business must find the money to do it.

How many future jobs? Right now, America needs millions of jobs to get people back onto business payrolls. But there's also the challenge of a growing work force. 1½ million new jobs are needed every year from now through 1980—just to employ the young people reaching working age, and others entering the job market.

How much money does it take to create a new job?

The average investment to create a single new job opportunity in manufacturing is around $25,000. By 1980, it'll be at least $35,000 (or $52½ billion to create 1½ million new jobs).

Where will that money come from?

The key to getting the money we need for expansion and improvement of our plants is better earnings—earnings that can be invested in our operations and that will encourage investors to provide us additional money.

But this alone is not enough because under present Federal tax laws the government would take too much of any additional dollars we can earn. What we need now is Federal tax reform to help lower barriers to capital formation.

*In 1975, Bethlehem's earnings after taxes were only 4.8% of revenues.

How you can help gear up the American economy

The tax-writing committees of the U.S. Congress are studying the subject of "Capital Formation." Here are four tax measures which we believe the Congress should enact to encourage industrial expansion and to create jobs: (1) five-year capital recovery system, (2) 12% permanent investment tax credit, (3) write-off of the costs of pollution control facilities in the year they are incurred, (4) eliminate the double taxation of corporate profits paid out as dividends.

If you agree that revisions in present Federal tax laws are needed to provide the additional capital for more and better jobs, we ask you to tell that to your Senators and Congressman. For a free copy of the folder, "Project MainSpring—with your help it can wind up the American economy again," write: Public Affairs Dept., Room 476-NYT, Bethlehem Steel Corp., Bethlehem, PA 18016.

Closed Court Weighs Change in Rubin Carter's Bail

By SELWYN RAAB

Special to The New York Times
PATERSON, N.J., July 12—A closed court hearing ended here today for Rubin (Hurricane) Carter with a Passaic County judge announcing that he would rule before the end of the week on whether to revoke or increase Mr. Carter's $20,000 bail.

The unusual hearing, which lasted nine days, followed charges by Carolyn Kelley, the former head of Mr. Carter's New Jersey Defense Committee, that he attacked her. Mr. Carter, a former leading middleweight boxer, is awaiting trial in September on triple-murder charges.

Although the public and news reporters were barred from the hearing, it was learned that the evidence included disputed testimony by Mrs. Kelley and testimony by at least six physicians relating to Mrs. Kelley's alleged injuries. Mr. Carter, who is 39 years old, did not testify.

According to court sources, Mrs. Kelley, 41, said that Mr. Carter, without provocation, punched her and threatened to kill her in his motel room while both were in Landover, Md., to attend a heavyweight championship fight last April. The prosecutor's office, which asked for the hearing, also called as witnesses Mrs. Kelley's son, Michael, 25, and a woman friend of the son.

The son and the woman friend both reportedly testified that Mrs. Kelley's face was bruised and that she had said that Mr. Carter had assaulted her.

The office of Prosecutor Burrill I. Humphreys, over the objections of the defense, introduced psychiatric tests of Mr. Carter.

In rebuttal, defense lawyers are believed to have called witnesses who saw Mrs. Kelley soon after the alleged attack and who disputed her version of the incident. The defense reportedly also obtained testimony from hospital personnel who had examined Mrs. Kelley and raised questions as to why she was denied admission at two hospitals when she returned home to Newark.

The defense, according to reliable sources, stressed that Mrs. Kelley waited 17 days before entering a hospital and that she had been hospitalized several times in recent years for a variety of medical complaints.

Mrs. Kelley, who claimed she suffered head and back injuries, said she would decide upon filing criminal charges against Mr. Carter after the hearing.

Mr. Carter has denied the charges, asserting that Mrs. Kelley brought them after he refused to give her $250,000. County Judge William Marchese said he would hand down his decision Thursday or Friday.

Mr. Carter and his co-defendant, John Artis, 30, were freed from life-term convictions last March after the State Supreme Court ruled that evidence had been suppressed at a 1965 trial.

"One of these could educate every kid in Cincinnati."

"One brand-new B-1 bomber costs $87 million.

Enough to wipe out the cost of public education in Cincinnati. With enough left over to fund the libraries in the District of Columbia. A single B-1 could pay for fire protection in Los Angeles for one year. Or finance the entire budget for the city of Atlanta.

Or pay all yearly expenses for streets, parks, and sanitation for Indianapolis, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Hartford, and Milwaukee. Combined.

But what about the military benefits of the B-1?

According to a host of experts, there aren't any.

A Brookings Institution study found: 'No significant military advantages [are] to be gained by deploying a new penetrating bomber such as the B-1.'

Yet, two weeks ago, Congress voted full speed ahead on the most expensive weapon in U.S. history—a 244-plane system that could cost $100 billion.

Our union wants to stop the B-1 funding.

And we urge the Democratic Convention to join us.

Scientists Begin Effort to Produce Methane Gas and Nutrients From Kelp Off Southern California Coast day, the three-foot-long kelp tips pruned from a 100,000-acre, self-contained floating reef could be distilled to produce 43 million cubic feet of synthetic methane gas, as well as great quantities of crop fertilizers and silage for enough cattle and sheep to provide food for 500,000 to 800,000 people.

The hexagonal, 10,000-square-foot fast reef, now at the Navy pier in Long Beach, measures about 100 feet between its farthest points, with a subsurface grid of polypropylene lines on which kelp plants will be strung by Navy frogmen.

The stringers are supported by six concrete poles radiating out and upward from a spar buoy axis, which will be anchored to the ocean bottom.

Later, full-scale farms will be untethered, with their own underwater propeller and steering systems to maintain the desired position.

Deep Water Needed

The test module will lie about 60 feet below the surface at its deepest point and about 40 feet at the tips of its radial supports, except for the upper part of the buoy. This supports a diesel-driven electric generator and pump to send up 500 gallons of deep ocean water a minute to nourish the kelp.

The nitrogen-rich deep water has been found, in earlier tests near the Navy's San Clemente Island off San Diego, to be essential to rapid growth of the giant kelp, or Macrocystis pyrifera.

Experiments with a seven-acre network of San Clemente kelp plants strung on polypropylene ropes and anchored near the surface in 300 feet of water demonstrated that, without the deep-drawn, nitrogen-rich water, the sunlight-seeking kelp would survive but not grow.

In subsequent larger offshore farms the upwelling pumps will be driven by wave power, requiring from one-half horsepower to two horsepower per acre, depending on whether the kelp is found to need five, 10 or 15 feet of fresh deep water over its surface each day. Dr. Wilcox estimated that a 100,000-acre farm might require upwelling of as much as two billion tons of water a day.

The kelp froods will be clipped off three feet below the surface by divers or a harvesting ship similar to three commercial vessels now in use along the southern California coast.

In large offshore installations of 1,000-acre to 100,000-acre sizes, a large platform at the axis of the kelp-growing grid, in appearance much like an offshore oil-drilling rig, is designed to have a helicopter landing pad, living quarters, docking facilities for a company harvesting ship and a multipurpose processing plant.

Kelp will be forced through a conduit to huge vats seeded with bacteria to produce methane gas. Other parts of the plant will extract nutrients for animal feed and organics for fertilizer.

From recycling of the clipped kelp froods, whose cropping actually strengthens the plant and encourages its growth, a sludge still rich in minerals and microscopic phytoplankton also has been fed successfully to cattle, swine and poultry.

Dr. Wilcox said the quarter-acre test module represented the first part of a three-phase program that has been laid out, calling for construction and operation of a 100,000-acre about 60 percent of the harvested kelp would be seeded with two kinds of bacteria to convert it, first into acetic acid and then into methane gas, and about 30 percent for livestock food and 10 percent for other uses, including food for sea urchins, fish and abalooe.

Recent tests at the University of California at Davis showed that a diet consisting of 40 percent dried kelp was as nutritious for sheep as alfalfa. Kelp also has been fed successfully to cattle, swine and poultry.

Dr. Wilcox said the quarter-acre test module represented the first part of a three-phase program that has been laid out, calling for construction and operation of a 100,000-acre phase 3 "placation" by 1992. Assuming that financing can be obtained, the test farm will be operated for a year before going to phase 2, which he described as a four-year or five-year effort involving a thousand-acre facility costing $50 million.

"The, if, as we anticipate, we have firmly established the feasibility, including the economics of commercial operation, we hope to embark about 1982 on an eight or ten-year project calling for a 100,000-acre facility that probably would cost from $2 billion to $4 billion," he added.

Starting August 1, the only airline with non-stops to Tokyo will have them every day.

In April, Pan Am introduced the new long-range 747 SP. It made possible non-stop passenger service to Tokyo. It makes the trip 3 days a week.

Starting August 1, you'll be able to fly our non-stop to Tokyo any day of the week you want, at noon. Since it is a non-stop, it follows that it's also the fastest way to Tokyo. In fact, it saves you over 2 hours.

And with all the comforts we provide on the plane, this shortened flight will seem even shorter. For example, if you're flying first class, you can take advantage of our upper-deck dining room. There is one sitting for lunch and one for dinner, with a choice from among 4 entrees. When you buy your ticket, a seat at a table should be reserved. As in any fine restaurant.

If you're flying economy, you won't feel left out. You can choose from among 3 entrees from our international menu. And if you'd like, there's a choice of 2 movies. (There is no charge in first class, a nominal charge of $2.50 in economy.)

Whether you're flying first class or economy one thing you get in both is plenty of room to stretch your legs and walk around.

YOU CAN SAVE UP TO 20% ON HOTELS.

There was a time when hotel bargains were available only to air travelers who bought a tour. Now businessmen (or any Pan Am passenger) can take advantage of a hotel deal. And save themselves up to 20% compared with the published offerings of other major airlines, for these hotels.

Pan Am's "Pacific on a Pass" program takes in 85 first class or deluxe hotels in 29 cities in 15 countries in the Pacific. Not only can it save you money on your hotel bill, it also takes in the little extras that add up. Like local taxes and service charges, and some other benefits you might want to find out for yourself.

FOR CONCERNED DEMOCRATS AND CURIOUS REPUBLICANS

The incomparable Will Rogers quipped "I'm not a member of any organized party. I'm a Democrat." Is this true?

In the three decades since FDR, the party ranks have swelled and encompass an uneasy alliance of differing, often opposing groups. The Democratic Party today is attempting to placate innumerable segments in order to achieve a winning majority. Can it work? Is the party capable of mounting an effective partisan challenge to the Republicans this election year and beyond? Will Jimmy Carter lead the Democrats out of the wilderness?

Here, for the first time, a major political historian tells what has happened since '45 and what must be learned from these experiences to shape its future success. Interviewed were dozens of congressmen, senators and legislative aides of all Democratic persuasions. Many closed collections of papers—and closed doors—were opened to the author. Every concerned and informed Democrat, and many Republicans as well, should read this vital book.

Ford Shifts and Expands Press Staff

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 12—President Ford, reportedly concerned that he is suffering politically because his accomplishments have not been adequately communicated to the public, reshuffled his public information staff today in an effort to strengthen it.

Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, announced that Mr. Ford had appointed David R. Gergen, now special counsel to the President, as director of the White House Office of Communications. He also disclosed that the communications office would be expanded and given additional duties.

In response to questions at today's regular news briefing, Mr. Nessen denied that the communications office was being reshuffled to enhance Mr. Ford's campaign efforts, saying the changes were intended as "a service to the press."

Worked for Nixon

However, Mr. Gergen said after the briefing that because this was a political year, his office would inevitably be responding to many requests for statements on the position of Mr. Ford and his Administration on a wide variety of issues.

Mr. Gergen, who is 34 years old, was on the White House staff under President Nixon in several capacities, including speechwriter. He is now succeeding Margita E. White, whom Mr. Ford nominated today to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. Ford also announced the appointment of William F. Rhatigan, now special assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury for public affairs, to be deputy director of the White House communications office.

As special assistant to the President, a title he will retain, Mr. Gergen had frequent access to Mr. Ford. He will continue to enjoy that access, according to White House sources. In the White House, such access is generally regarded as an indicator of influence and power.

2 Groups Criticized

Mr. Nessen emphasized in announcing the appointment that the director of the communications office would continue to report through him. However, White House officials said Mr. Gergen would be more of a co-equal to the press secretary than a subordinate.

For some time there has been dissatisfaction with both the White House and the President Ford committee over what was regarded as a failure to publicize Mr. Ford's record adequately.

Today, officials from both the White House and the Ford Committee expressed gratification at the change. They said it could enhance Mr. Ford's prospects as he heads for a showdown with Ronald Reagan, his challenger for the Republican Presidential nomination, and the hope in the national campaign against Jimmy Carter, the expected Democratic nominee.

Unlike his predecessor, Mr. Gergen will deal extensively with national reporters and help explain White House policy and strategy. Other new duties will include coordinating "news events" at the White House and serving as liaison with other Administration spokesmen throughout the Federal Government.

Current Duties

Duties now performed by the office include liaison with editors and publishers, preparing the President's news summary and briefing materials and arranging interviews and briefings for reporters outside Washington as well as supplying them with documents and news releases.

In another shift in the President's communications staff, it was confirmed today that Robert Mead, Mr. Ford's television adviser, had resigned. The resignation came apparently after Mr. Nessen criticized Mr. Mead's performance in the job. Mr. Nessen would not confirm or deny that he had made the critical statements.

Mrs. White was nominated for a seven-year term on the Federal Communications Commission, succeeding Glen O. Robinson, whose term expired on June 30. Since Mr. Robinson's seat is regarded as one that traditionally goes to a Democrat, the nomination of Mrs. White may face some difficulty in the Senate. Mrs. White, 39, was born in Sweden.

Also today, Mr. Ford signed legislation to improve the country's airports and airway. According to a White House "fact sheet," the legislation will, among other things, permit Federal grants for noise suppression, land purchase for environmental use and purchase of snow removal equipment, as well as provide higher financing for small airports. It also grants more flexibility to state and local governments in the use of funds.

GREAT WINES FROM THE NAPA VALLEY

California's Napa Valley, just north of the San Francisco Bay area, produces some of the best wines of the United States. The vineyards grow the great wine grapes of Europe—Cabernet Sauvignon, Pinot Noir, Chardonnay, Riesling, and Merlot.

One of the most remarkable Napa Valley wineries is STERLING VINEYARDS. Crowning a hill outside the town of Calistoga, Sterling's striking home resembles an Aegean monastery, complete with stained glass and bellies. The vines in this beautiful setting are every bit as attractive: complex, refined and together excellent. Each shows a happy harmony of the most modern advances in California wine-making combined with centuries-old, classic techniques.

The four 'varietal' wines should be specially noted by those who appreciate the best this country can offer. But do not overlook the two modestly labeled 'STERLING RED' and 'STERLING WHITE', both carrying the appellation of the Valley. They represent a delightful low-cost introduction to this impressive California winery.

—Sterling Vineyards Red Wines—

STERLING NAPA VALLEY RED	Bottle	2.99	3
A full-bodied combination of Cabernet Sauvignon and Grenache, plus small amount of Pinot and Zinfandel. Delicious, well-balanced, dry. Also available in magnums at $5.49 the magnum, 3 the case of six.
ZINFANDEL		3.49	3
Forthright, robust, fragrant. Superb example of what dedicated vintners can do with California's 'native' grape.
CABERNET SAUVIGNON 1972		6.59	7
The king of California wines achieves a pinnacle of excellence at Sterling. Prize winner at the Angeles County Fair—the state's most important wine competition.

—Sterling Vineyards White Wines—

STERLING NAPA VALLEY WHITE	Bottle	2.99	3
The wine is actually a blend of Chenin Blanc and White Riesling, and is delightful—fresh, fruity, Also available in magnums at $5.49 the magnum, $29.65 the case of six.
CHENIN BLANC 1974		4.99	5
Dry, almost austere. One of the best California wines made from this Loire Valley grape that we ever tasted. The 1972 vintage served at White House state dinner for Queen Elizabeth II.
PINOT CHARDONNAY 1974		8.49	9
Full, classic, aged-in-oak bouquet. Absolutely top quality.

Ninth Avenue and 45th Street isn't exactly the heart of mid-town Manhattan. Which means, if I depended on window shoppers for business, I'd starve.

So, what I do is make sure I give people a damn good reason to come to my store. In fact, I give them two reasons. Prices that can't be beat and service that no one else even comes close to. I'll give you a Nikon F2S, Nikon F2, or a Nikkormat at the lowest price anywhere... try and get it for less.

And when it comes to service—everyone comes to Hirsch Photo. That's because I spend time with my customers. I don't give them the bum's rush. I'll spend an hour with them whether they're interested in a $700 camera or a $20 Instamatic.

I don't pressure people either. If you don't buy from us, fine. I know you'll be back because nobody else will treat you as good as we do. I guess, what it all comes down to, is at Hirsch Photo we don't hand people a line.

That's why there's a line waiting to get into Hirsch Photo. Even if it is at Ninth Avenue & 45th Street.

are understood to have been offset, since his latest Federal reports were filed, by fund-raising efforts up and down the East Coast that continued this month almost to the eve of the Democratic National Convention.

But the President was running close to the $10.9 million limit on political spending for the nomination. With seven weeks to go in the contest for uncommitted delegates, Mr. Ford's committee had spent $9.5 million before July 1. It thus would be limited to spending no more than $1.4 million for all of July and the first three weeks of August before the Republican convention makes its decision.

he can raise it on the home-stretch of the campaign. The Reagan forces raised somewhat less money than the Ford campaign last month, but it also spent $200,000 less in a period when Mr. Reagan erased most of Mr. Ford's lead in committed convention delegates.

Democrats Meet, and Strauss Calls for an End of Eight Years of Nixon

For Carter's Nomination United Party Prepared

mittee's impeachment hearings won him fame.

"If we promise, we must deliver. If we propose, we must produce. If we ask for sacrifice, we must be the first to give. If we make mistakes, we must be willing to admit them."

In the first of two keynote addresses, Senator John Glenn of Ohio, one of the contenders for the Vice-Presidential nomination, eschewed partisan rable rousing. Instead, he delivered an appeal for a renewal of the "ideals, beliefs and confidence" of the country to give it "the resolve, the will, the drive" to carry on the American Revolution.

The former astronaut recalled the eight-minute passage over the United States on his space flight in 1962, a flight, he said, that persuaded him that "our common blessings vastly outweigh our shortcomings and our divisions."

Milling and Bumping

In the best Democratic tradition, Mr. Strauss had to appeal, again and again, for the delegates to "clear the aisles." In the best Democratic tradition, they ignored him, milling about, bumping into television cameras, paying little heed to the early speakers.

A hush settled over the drum-shaped arena for the evening's film, but that appeared to result more from the fact that the lights were turned out than from the content of the film. It featured Edward Asner, a television actor, as Mr. Dooley, the political philosopher created by Finley Peter Dunne 50 years ago.

The floor was a mosaic of familiar faces—Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago, Florida and smiling in an aisle seat; Sharon Percy Rockefeller, her blonde hair elegantly coiffed, standing at the rear of the West Virginia delegation; Tom Whitney, the young Iowa state chairman who gave early support to Mr. Carter, in gray pin stripes; Don O'Brien of Iowa and Patrick J. Lucey of Wisconsin—laughing and reminiscing near the TV tower.

15 Minutes Late

Mr. Strauss brought the gavel down at 8:15, a quarter of an hour late, and Peter Duchin's orchestra, stationed high above the red, white and blue dais, heralded the first session with Aaron Copland's "Fanfare for the Common Man."

The main Democrats will nominate tomorrow night, barring the totally unexpected, a 51-year-old Mr. Carter, was absent from the hall as the party's

The Program For Today

Following are highlights from the tentative program for the Democratic National Convention today:

3:30 P.M.—Chairman opens second session. Invocation and presentation of colors.

4 P.M.—Credentials Committee report by Senator Alan Cranston of California, the committee chairman.

5 P.M.—Remarks by Dwayne Holman, president of the Young Democrats; Mayor Moon Landrieu of New Orleans, past president, United States Conference of Mayors, and Mayor Kenneth A. Gibson of Newark, president, United States Conference of Mayors.

Report on 1976 Campaign Committee by Senator Wendell H. Ford of Kentucky.

5:45 P.M.—Rules Committee report on recommended convention officers, followed by election of former Representative Martha W. Griffiths of Michigan as chairman.

6:30 P.M.—Rules Committee report on permanent procedural rules for the convention.

8 P.M.—Remarks by City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin, Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr. of New Jersey, Senator George McGovern of South Dakota and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota.

9 P.M.—Platform Committee report by Gov. Wendell R. Anderson of Minnesota, committee chairman. Speeches on platform plans by the following: Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, Mayor Coleman A. Young of Detroit and Gloria Schaffer, Connecticut Secretary of the State, on full employment, price stability and balanced growth; Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, Bess Myerson, Michael Steed and Jerry Wurf, president of the American Federation of County, State and Municipal employees, on government reform and business accountability; Senator Harrison A. Williams Jr. of New Jersey, Dr. Gracela Orivarez, Mary King and Coretta Scott King on government and human needs; Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and Representative Paul S. Sarbanes of Maryland on states, counties and cities; Representatives Glynn Spillman of Maryland and Thomas S. Foley of Washington on national resources and environmental quality; Senator Frank Church of Idaho, Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr., retired, and Patricia Harris, 11 P.M.— recess.

orators scoured the opposition and pointed the way for all loyal Democrats.

But he completed during the day his careful interrogation of seven Vice-Presidential prospects and moved toward a decision at long last, perhaps as soon as tonight.

Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr. of New Jersey, one of those with whom Mr. Carter talked yesterday, later withdrew from consideration. Never considered a likely selection, he will place Mr. Carter's name in nomination.

Pressure For Muskie

The Georgian was under pressure from many party traditionalists to pick Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine to remedy his weakness among Roman Catholics. Mr. Muskie remained in the running, according to Carter insiders, along with Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, still the seeming favorite, and Mr. Glenn, whose chances appeared to most well-informed politicians to be fading.

Mr. Carter's difficulties with Catholics stem from many sources—his long-standing antipathy toward Protestant fundamentalism, from his refusal to endorse an anti-abortion constitutional amendment and even from an oversight by the convention managers, who neglected to invite Terence Donohue, a Catholic, to deliver an invocation.

Mr. Rodino pressed Mr. Mondale's cause at the meeting at which he told Mr. Carter of his withdrawal.

Mr. Glenn was being described by Carter aides in private conversations with allies on the floor last night in unflattering terms. One aide told a state chairman that a Carter-Glenn ticket would have "just zero chemistry."

No Great Enthusiasm

Although his Ohio friends sent him to the podium with a great cheer, the former astronaut generated no great enthusiasm with his speech, which he delivered in an almost conversational tone, certainly nothing like the tumultuous applause that propelled another keynoteur, Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, to the Vice-Presidential nomination 28 years ago.

Moving to dampen dissatisfaction among other groups, the former Governor of Georgia made concessions to leading Democratic feminists on the role of women in the party and in Carter administration that seemed likely to preclude a nasty floor fight Thursday.

He also met with prominent blacks. Afterward, Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., said the black leadership solidly supported Mr. Carter, but some black Democrats said they planned to nominate Mayor Thomas Bradley of Los Angeles for Vice President as a symbolic gesture.

Activity swirled around the convention hotels, and especially the venerable Statler Hilton, the headquarters hotel, all morning and all afternoon, as the delegates, alternates and hangers-on awaited the opening.

In front of the Statler Hilton, across Seventh Avenue from the gray sawhorses waiting off the Garden, the scene looked as if it had been painted by a latter-day Brueghel. The sidewalk was jammed with delegates, families, reporters, aides to candidates active and inactive, messengers, vendors and a man holding a poster advertising a dairy restaurant on his head.

Inside, the hotel switchboard was swamped and the elevators were overloaded.

At the other hotels, where state delegations were housed, one leader after another stood up and urged his followers to fall in behind the man from Georgia.

The exception was at the New York Hilton, where more than 1,000 people fought their way into a meeting room to cheer Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, the active challenger to Mr. Carter's nomination. He said he would not poll out yet, even though

Democratic Convention Is Second-Largest in Town

By JOSEPH LELYVELD

The Democratic National Convention is the second-largest convention in town.

But it's the occasion for the largest: The sometimes competitive and generally clamorous gathering of roughly 10,000 clamorous reporters, editors, broadcasters, photographers, cameramen, soundmen, couriers, technicians and roustabouts who are squeezed together under the rubric "press" in the crowded precincts of Madison Square Garden.

The dominant presence is that of the three television networks, each of which has descended on the Garden with the strength of an army battalion—in total, a combined force on the order of 2,500. The misnamed anchor "booths" of the networks, which are as costly and as carefully appointed as Malibu Beach houses, overhang the convention floor and, in dull moments at least, will overshadow what is happening there.

But not all the journalism practiced in the Garden is being practiced in the formation of a phalanx or electronically. Some 700 daily newspapers have sent representatives to the convention and, almost in a line, in an era of herd journalism, there are some that are represented here by solitary reporters.

For instance, the Henderson Gleaner of Henderson, Ky. (circulation, 10,500), is represented by Walt Dear, its owner and editor, who had a long interview with Jimmy Carter back in January 1975, when the Georgian was still finding it impossible to attract the attention of the hundreds of newsmen who milled around the convention floor while it was still being readied for the delegates. They said that they would be following the activities of a Hasidic delegate from the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn who has a seat in the New York Delegation.

"Our main interest," said Isaac Ausch, one of the Hasidic reporters, "is to see how New York, as the city with the greatest Jewish population, affects the convention."

Crews Filming Crews

Before the delegates arrived, the journalists on the floor had nothing to report on but themselves. Sunday afternoon, when the CBS floor reporters sat down in comfortable poses in empty delegate seats to film an advance spot, a small crowd of photographers and television cameramen gathered to film the CBS crew filming the reporters.

Sticking his head out of his anchor booth, a CBS producer shouted, "Clear all those people out of there. They're in the shot." Predictably, this produced a chorus of boos and deprecating remarks, but the crowd melted back.

"Is that all right, Walter?" someone shouted.

Probably the scene in this kind of media mirror act was achieved by a reporter from radio station WBEL of Pittsfield, Mass., who thrust a microphone at John Engel, 13 years old, and Christopher Clay, 12, who were identified by their yellow T-shirts as members of the "Children's Express News Team."

Although they are fully accredited to the convention as representatives of a publication that is described as being "by children and for children," the youngsters had just been denied access to a reception at the Steer Palace near Seventh Avenue on 33d Street. The reporter from Pittsfield wanted to know if there would be a protest.

The Children's Express reporters were writing also for Reliable Source, an irreverent, 12-page daily newspaper that appears for five days twice every four years—whenever the Democrats and Republicans convene in solemn conclave—under the auspices of Dick Tuck, the political prankster.

In its first issue here, Reliable Source reported that the Vice-Presidential sweepstakes were over and that Senator Edmund S. Muskie had won. The story was by-lined "Shallow Throat." Mr. Tuck said that it had been written by "a very prominent, well-recognized Washington newsmen."

In 1972, Mr. Tuck described himself as the publisher of Reliable Source. This year he isn't using the title. "I think of myself more as Norman Lear [the television comedy producer] than as a publisher," he said. "Dorothy Schiff [the publisher of New York Post] he explained. "Publisher" doesn't really say it."

Some local correspondents are here simply to report on the doings of their state delegations, leaving the larger drama of the convention to the news agencies and the networks. Mr. Dear is here for the big picture.

"I'm going to give it the hearts and flowers bit," he said. "I came here to see how they're going to get people reinterested in politics. That's the real question."

The journalistic pecking order at the Garden is established by an array of oblong tags of various hues, which the press workers wear on a string around the neck.

Mr. Dear not only has a yellow tag that entitles him to enter the building but also an orange tag that gives him access to one of the 1,235 seats in the press stand near the podium; an unobstructed seat, at that.

Lavender Tag Coveted

An orange tag is better than a pinkish-peach tag, which confines its bearer to the remote reaches of the arena, but not so good as the fiercely coveted lavender tag, which gets him to the convention floor.

In addition to the small-town press, there is the ethnic press, distinguished by their earlocks and yarmul-

kes, two Hasidic reporters from The Jewish Post and Opinion stood out among the hundreds of newsmen who milled around the convention floor while it was still being readied for the delegates. They said that they would be following the activities of a Hasidic delegate from the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn who has a seat in the New York Delegation.

"Our main interest," said Isaac Ausch, one of the Hasidic reporters, "is to see how New York, as the city with the greatest Jewish population, affects the convention."

Mr. Dear not only has a yellow tag that entitles him to enter the building but also an orange tag that gives him access to one of the 1,235 seats in the press stand near the podium; an unobstructed seat, at that.

Lavender Tag Coveted

An orange tag is better than a pinkish-peach tag, which confines its bearer to the remote reaches of the arena, but not so good as the fiercely coveted lavender tag, which gets him to the convention floor.

In addition to the small-town press, there is the ethnic press, distinguished by their earlocks and yarmul-

kes, two Hasidic reporters from The Jewish Post and Opinion stood out among the hundreds of newsmen who milled around the convention floor while it was still being readied for the delegates. They said that they would be following the activities of a Hasidic delegate from the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn who has a seat in the New York Delegation.

"Our main interest," said Isaac Ausch, one of the Hasidic reporters, "is to see how New York, as the city with the greatest Jewish population, affects the convention."

Though Fare Is Bland Unity Is Deemed

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

Outside Madison Square Garden, a sidewalk vendor delighted in the attention paid to her stock of lapel buttons bearing nothing but a strikingly familiar set of grinning teeth. They were, said the vendor, "really unique."

So they were, at least as the symbol of a Democratic National Convention. As the 5,000-odd delegates and alternates gathered for the opening ceremonies last night, the party's sternest test seemed to be whether they could stand four straight days of grinning at one another in the Garden of Eden.

Jimmy Carter's triumph a full month before the show opened made political jolliness out of the would-be nomination brokers—George Meany, the labor leader, did not even come to the convention—and the delegates kept saying that the only mystery was Mr. Carter's choice for a running mate.

But there was a feeling, at least at the outset, that bland may be beautiful. Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago, who never got to sit down when liberal reformers denied him a chair at the 1972 convention, visited the Garden four hours early yesterday to make certain there was a seat for him.

"It's good to have one for a change that's all cut and dried," he said of the convention.

"Unity, togetherness—to win," the Mayor mumbled. Then he smiled.

Challenge Is Gone

Frank Mankiewicz, the manager of Senator George McGovern's ill-fated nomination four years ago, said he was nonchalant about his duties as a Carter floor manager. He was, he said, a subaltern at a coronation: superfluous and for show. He smiled too and wondered where there might be a good poker game.

The Maine party chairman, Harold C. Pachios, far from preoccupied with Senator Edmund S. Muskie's chances as a possible running mate, went sailing in New York harbor. The Senator was back in Maine anyway, fishing. The convention, said Mr. Pachios, is a "pleasant" spot to meet old friends.

It was like the Rolling Stones suddenly turning on to Mantovani.

For all the uncommon calm in a party that had gritted teeth through the chaos of Chicago and muddle of Miami Beach to its last two such productions, there was some drama—albeit of a somewhat different order—and there was bound to be more as the week unfolded. Would the keynote address by John Glenn, the Georgia senator watching the Carter site of the American Revolution's original founding be belated "pious" recreations on Governmental tion?

There were likely to be a number of other party's sternest test seemed to be whether they could stand four straight days of grinning at one another in the Garden of Eden.

Conventioners Find New York Both a 'Fun' and a Friendly City

By MAURICE CARROLL

Arm in arm, Lynette Gittens and Bill McEwen and Teresa Lunsford and Ray Stevens did a wiggly sort of dance to "When the Democrats... Come Marchin' In," on the stage of the New York Hilton Hotel yesterday.

Miss Gittens, Miss Lunsford and other members of the All-City Chorus danced down off the stage to where guests at the Democratic National Convention were plunking, some of them seated on the flowered carpet of the ballroom. And they danced back up, with Mr. McEwen, a delegate from Ohio, and other Democrats.

"He's chicken, he won't dance," Miss Gittens said later, with a big grin. "My Southern accent," said Mr. McEwen "and her West Indian accent. Wow! What a combination!"

The conventioners had expected simply to be guests at a luncheon given by the city's host committee. But they were called on to join in the entertainment when members of the chorus sang, and they responded with exuberance. "It was fun. I loved it," panted Peggy Cadenhead of Oklahoma, after the communal song and dance had ended and the conventioners had resumed their picnic. "They're really being wonderful to us."

New York City persisted yesterday in its love feast with the thousands of people who have poured into town for the Democratic meeting and in its sudden fascination with itself now as a place that was going bankrupt but as a very nice place to visit.

Mayor Beame, who had spent a year and a half of fiscal crisis being photographed with a pained expression on his face, grinned, raised both fists in the air in a gesture of merriment and told the guests: "We're here to restore our image, to revitalize our country."

His grin widened, "And while you're doing it," he said, "please have some fun." A bit later, he turned to a luncheon companion and said fervently: "I wouldn't believe it. Really, I never, never would have dreamed of such unanimous nice sentiments about New York City."

"Support for Lindsay in 2d Place Growing" proclaimed an 8-column banner headline. But that was another year and another party. John V. Lindsay was a Republican then, it was the party's national convention in 1968 in Miami Beach and there were thoughts that the Mayor of New York City, a charismatic politician, might be Richard M. Nixon's choice for second place.

By 1972, Mr. Lindsay was a Democrat. By 1976, he was the former Mayor and, when his fellow Democrat gathered in New York City to nominate their national ticket, Mr. Lindsay, a lawyer and an occasional performer on ABC-TV, was out of town.

"He was called to Iran on legal business," said Irving Oppenheimer, who was his close aide at City Hall and continues in that role, now that Mr. Lindsay is back in private life.

Not unlike the Bicentennial Weekend that preceded it, the convention confronts the unsuspecting passer-by with frequent eruptions of mild protest and noisy celebration. "Gay rights!" sounded in a thin solo chant under the Americana marquee.

"Now!" came an echoing chorus. And a small parade of protesters marched past, bemused visitors to the Carter headquarters hotel.

A stroller ambled southward under the ILLWV sign that said "Welcome Democrats," its electric lights faint in the bright sunlight of a breezy, 81-degree seventh, at 34th Street and Seventh Avenue, near the entrance to Madison Square Garden, the convention site. And there, hungry but enthusiastically musical, were the girls of the St. Ignatius cadet corps from Hicksville, L.I. "We were supposed to be given a box lunch and everything," complained Tom Costa, their director. "But nobody knows anything."

However, the girls entertained anyway and then boarded their buses to return to Hicksville.

The New York Times Mayor Beame at the New York Hilton yesterday proclaiming, "We're here to revitalize the country."

Akron, Miss Smith told a reporter, "and I didn't know what to say, but I said something and so did Beth, and we got elected. It was just some crazy idea we had in our heads." Anyway, Miss Smith turns out to be the youngest delegate among the 3,008 at the convention. She will be 18 years old on Oct. 14 and she qualified under an Ohio law that permits one to vote and hold office if he will be 18 by the time of the general election.

At the Statler-Hilton last night, the City Democratic Committee held what it called a $100-a-ticket fundraising event. But the place was full of free guests. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota spoke briefly, as did Mayor Beame and Governor Carey.

Former Governor W. Averell Harriman drew applause from the crowd when he said: "I'm one of those who remember there was a convention here before. But I was a Republican then, so I didn't go. But ever since I've become a Democrat, I've had more fun out of life."

Jenine Melzer, 21 years old, an alternate delegate from California, is a quadriplegic amputee. She gets around in a motorized wheelchair. She has gone into politics to fight for equal rights for the physically handicapped.

"I'm not out to make political hay," she said, after conferring with Leo McCarthy, chairman of the California delegation. "I'm not running for office. I want equal rights for a minority, the physically disabled."

In August she will be entering Loyola Law School. She has been in politics more than six years. As volunteer in the Brown-for-President movement, she ran a neighborhood headquarters in Los Angeles, where she lives, and also raised funds. She traveled back and forth—more than three miles each way—in her motorized wheelchair.

"OTB," an announcement by the Offtrack Betting Corporation said, "will have specially trained personnel in to provide Democratic convention delegates with information concerning the city." So there at the OTB information booth in the Seventh Avenue passageway leading to Pennsylvania Station sat 25-year-old Susan Diaz, wearing a green sash with the white letters "OTB."

"Most people want to know how to get to the Statue of Liberty," she said. She laughed when that observation was received in skeptical silence. "Actually, most people want a good tip," she said.

While the Democrats waded through the motions at Madison Square Garden, a group of high-spirited revolutionaries staged a counter-convention last night at the Hotel Diplomat on West 43d Street. The free-wheeling gathering, underwritten by High Times magazine, drew several hundred counter-culturists and fully costumed Yippies for an evening of hard-rock music, soft-core satire and what one participant insisted was "home grown" marijuana.

There were speeches in favor of abortion, homosexuality and prostitution, and a rousing cheer for "Nobody," the Yippies' official Presidential candidate, who, it was noted, received 41 percent of the eligible vote in 1972—the votes of those who did not bother to cast ballots.

Great Quadrennial Cry: 'Please Clear the Aisles'

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

At 8:52 o'clock last night, the Democrats heard for the first time in the 1976 convention what most Americans recognize as the great quadrennial rallying cry of American national politics: "Will the delegates please clear the aisles!"

Already that plea was being ignored. A gray-haired man in the Puerto Rican delegation with the style of a superior executive was halfway through a thick portfolio of what appeared to be personal business mail, signing away, handing items to a secretary with a few words of instruction. A man in the North Carolina delegation continued reading his newspaper just as he did through the early rallying speeches.

Thus the schizoid life of a typical national convention was well under way. On one level, there was the crisp tight close-ups of main speakers and favored interviewees being broadcast to most of America. On the other level, there was the great milling, noisy throng gathered below the altar-like platform, going about their own business like a crowd at an airline terminal.

The crowd offered extra attention without being asked when Lieut. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak brought a translator with her to the platform who offered her speech in sign language to the hard of hearing. And they quieted again when the lights dimmed and the format switched to a party propaganda film for the television audience that featured Ed Asner of the Mary Tyler Moore Show in an acting capacity. Let any one imagine politics was taking on still another sitcom life of its own, the network's superimposed a caution that it was a political film they were seeing, not the usual fare.

He had to travel to Manhattan to make it, but in a way Mayor Richard L. Daley of Chicago came home again, finally being received as a noncontroversial, honored guest at his party's convention.

"We had Dick out in a police launch yesterday, it was beautiful," said Mayor Beame, the host Mayor. "He looked great. He's enjoying himself."

This time, however, Mr. Daley is present not in the role of an 11th-hour broker that he prefers, but as one of a large number of mayor-delegates who Mr. Beame said were here as a sign of how national politics was shifting.

Rather than hoping for some urban brokering, Mr. Beame explained, the modern mayor has to run as a delegate and hope enough of his colleagues also make the convention to serve as a force. "That's the only way to get a piece of the action these days," he said, hurrying across the convention floor and obviously enjoying the recognition he got at numerous turns.

The sidewalk bordering the Garden provided the special sort of hospitality suite that only New York pedestrians know well. At 33d and seventh, a tanned, bearded man in a flowing robe wore a full-size aluminum foil wings and stumped a small harp. He offered a baritone giggle when asked what he was up to. "I'm out, sure. I've just begun angling," said the man who also carried a broom and offered a business card identifying himself as Ramasan, the "angelic janitor."

A short distance away, a man wearing an oversized, grotesque papier-mâché mask carried a sign saying, "Park for Sale." Across the street, a grim-faced man told passers-by, "A thousand killed every day. His card table was decked with anti-abortion pamphlets. Some conventioners, chatting happily as they approached the Garden stopped at the pictures of dead fetuses and moved up the sidewalk where hawkers were selling Carter novelties.

"I'm Sol, the Mayor of Brighton Beach," said a smiling grizzle-faced man. "And I'm taking one of these Carter hats, O.K."

An unshowered caucus at the Statler-Hilton coffee shop occurred when Allard K. Lowenstein ran into some old friends who were part of the 1968 "Dump Johnson" movement that put the notion of unruly excitement into the Democratic Party's modern conventioning, until this year at least. Mr. Lowenstein had no regrets at how senseless things were this time. "I was to see a Democrat President," he said. "I find that more exciting than excitement."

Choice of Convention Speaker Often Way For Repaying Debt or Rewarding Friend

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.

The speaking program at a national party convention, widely regarded by the uninitiated as haphazard filler that separates occasional news events, actually represents a carefully structured system of paying off old political debts, rewarding friends and creating potential leverage beyond the Presidential election.

While there is never any assurance that the delegates or the television audience will be paying the least attention, planners labor for months ahead to squeeze all possible personal or party advantage out of the four-day program.

The Democratic convention that opened last night at Madison Square Garden offered possibly major help to one Vice-presidential hopeful, Senator John Glenn, in the role of keynote speaker, for which he had been selected by the national chairman, Robert S. Strauss.

Three other potential running mates on Jimmy Carter's list—Senator Frank Church and Edmund S. Muskies and Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr.—managed to make the agenda later in the week, but Senators Walter F. Mondale, Adlai E. Stevenson and Henry M. Jackson did not.

Aides of Mr. Strauss innuendo that Senator Glenn had been chosen for a turn in the spotlight, along with Representative Barbara Jordan, months ago, long before the former astronaut emerged as a Vice-Presidential possibility.

This year's Democratic convention, with controversy over the platform, the delegates and the candidate virtually eliminated, offers an unusually open field for rewarding some Democrats and promoting others by personal appearances.

The platform, for example, will be presented by no fewer than 17 speakers, and it is no accident that among them are three Democrats seeking Senate seats now held by two Republicans and one independent—Gloria Schaffer of Connecticut, Paul S. Serbanes of Maryland and Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr. of Virginia. Also prominent in the platform presentation tonight will be Democrats of such divergent appeal as Gov. George C. Wallace, Coretta Scott King, Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and Mary King, apparently the only Carter campaign aide to break through into the program.

A number of Mr. Strauss's personal friends will be observable in featured roles on the rostrum, if only to the sharp-eyed. Among these are Mayors Moon Landrieu of New Orleans and Henry W. Maier of Milwaukee, although neither of them occupies the traditionally recognized position of president of the United States Conference of Mayors.

They will appear in addition to Mayor Kenneth A. Gibson of Newark, who heads the conference. In similar fashion, Gov. Philip W. Noel of Rhode Island, another social companion of Mr. Strauss, will make a brief appearance Wednesday night, although his protocol claim is no stronger than that of being past chairman of the Democratic Governors Associations.

This represents something of a consolation prize for Governor Noel, who was Mr. Strauss's original selection to head the Platform Committee but was forced to withdraw when some of his remarks about busing and black parents aroused considerable controversy.

Similarly, the report on 1976 democratic prospects in the Seacoast campaign will be presented by another comrade of Mr. Strauss, Senator Wendell H. Ford of Kentucky, rather than the chairman of the campaign committee, Senator J. Bennett Johnston Jr. of Louisiana.

Sometimes speakers mysteriously appear in positions of unexplained prominence on the convention program. One who did so, at least temporarily, was Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin of New York City, hardly a national democratic leader.

Until a few days ago he had been scheduled to address the delegates just before the candidates' acceptance speeches Thursday night. It was reliably reported that this political plum was passed to Mr. Goldin after some difficulty had been experienced in getting the comptroller to clear city payments for the convention.

When this was called to Mr. Strauss's attention Sunday, Mr. Goldin's name vanished from the program. Later, it was restored to a more inconspicuous spot—early this evening right after a possible rules debate.

The program has such nooks and crannies into which can be tucked speakers who lack current party favor but cannot be safely ignored altogether.

Thus, Lieut. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak, qualified for an appearance as a high official in the host state, a woman and a Democrat of Polish descent. But, lacking political support from Governor Carey, she found herself wedged last night between the treasurer's report and a convention film.

A much more delicate problem involved Senator Edward M. Kennedy, who declined an invitation to participate in the platform extravaganza for fear he might attract disproportionate delegate attention. He is still being sought for a cameo appearance later in the week.

er Found Lagging Among Catholics

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

By contrast, President Johnson won better than three of every four ballots cast by Catholics. John F. Kennedy also won better than three-quarters of the votes cast by his fellow Roman Catholics, but less than 40 percent of the Protestant vote.

Republicans Behind President Ford and former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California are both running well behind Mr. Carter among Protestants and Catholics, since many of those surveyed said they would not vote, or were undecided.

Mr. Carter, according to the survey, also appears to be well ahead among Jewish voters, but since Jews constitute only about 3 per cent of the population, they do not appear in sufficient numbers in nationwide polls to permit close analysis of their voting intentions.

The latest New York Times/CBS News survey was conducted in mid-June.

Since nationwide polling began in earnest in the 1950's, the victorious Democratic candidate always won a close to even split of voting age, as against just under half for two-thirds of the Catholic vote in those elections in which the Democrats' share of the Catholic vote dropped under 60 percent—Adlai E. Stevenson's 1952 and 1956 campaigns, Senator Hubert H. Humphrey's campaign in 1968, and Mr. McGovern's campaign—the Democrat lost.

According to Prof. Seymour Martin Lipset, who has written widely on the effects of religion on political behavior, the link between religion and support for political parties appeared long before the Civil War.

In an essay on the subject published in 1968, Professor Lipset quotes Alexis de Tocqueville, who noted in the 1830's that "the Catholics in the United States are the invariable supporters of the 'democratic party'."

The decline of the Whig Party in the 1850's further solidified Catholic support for Democrats. Of the two forces that contended to succeed the Whigs as the major opposition party to the Democrats, one was the antislavery movement and the other was anti-immigrant nativism.

While abolitionism became the dominant force in the new Republican Party, many party ideologists tried to merge opposition to slavery with anti-Catholicism.

Republican anti-Catholicism waxed and waned, depending on the times and the needs of the party. Some early Republican leaders, like Senator William H. Seward of New York, strongly advocated Catholic causes.

A Film for Democrats

16-Minute Convention Presentation Adds Little Life to the Proceedings

By VINCENT CANBY

The specially produced 16-minute film that was supposed to liven things up last night at the opening of the Democratic National Convention didn't.

But then it really wasn't a film. It was a folksy, 16-minute television commercial on behalf of the gentle relief to be had by buying the straight Democratic ticket.

"It came complete with testimonials (one grandmother, one black civil rights worker, one pretty young woman interested in women's rights, one farm wife, one retired social worker) as well as with a laugh track. This wasn't for the testimonials but for the remarks made by the host, Edward Asner, and the short sketch in which he played Finley Peter Dunne's philosophical Chicago barkeeper, Mr. Dooley.

but they hadn't come to Madison Square Garden to watch television. When he wasn't playing Mr. Dooley, Mr. Asner, a regular on the Mary Tyler Moore show, managed to quote sage remarks made by Will Rogers, Ben Franklin, Thomas Jefferson and Mark Twain, who was also quoted by Mayor Beame, who spoke to the convention—live—shortly before the film.

The laugh track raised an aesthetic question. Is it possible for a laugh track, made by no more than maybe 50 people laughing as if to die, to have an appreciable effect on the consciousness of 7,000 or 8,000 people? The answer last night was no. The film was greeted by what would have been a stony silence except for an isolated laugh-track giggle or two that wasn't absorbed by the wall-to-wall delegates and their guests.

The Dooley sketch was quite nice, full of 60-year-old wisdom that not many of the delegates paid attention to,

Carter Makes Peace With Black Leaders and Renews Pledge of High-Level Jobs

Paterson to Be Retained In a National Party Post

By PAUL DELANEY

Jimmy Carter made peace with a group of 30 black Democrats that included several who had bitterly opposed him up to the meeting. The group met for nearly an hour with the former Governor of Georgia in his suite at the Americana Hotel. Leaders said they were satisfied with several promises he had made, particularly the retention of Basil A. Paterson as vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee, in a Carter administration.

Black leaders were angered over reports that Mr. Paterson would be relieved of his duties, and they had made the issue a priority item for discussion when the meeting was arranged.

Democratic sources reported that Mr. Carter had planned to replace Mr. Paterson with Ben Brown, a Georgia State Representative, who is a close Carter aide from Atlanta.

After the session, Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., who was chairman of the coalition of blacks, said the group was unanimous in its support of Mr. Carter. This was the Mayor's first endorsement of Mr. Carter.

Others at the meeting who had not announced their support, or whose support had been lukewarm, included Jesse L. Jackson, the civil rights leader; Antonio Harrisoo, Alabama state representative, and Representatives Charles B. Diggs Jr. of Michigan and Yvonne B. Burke of California.

Blacks Promised Jobs

Mr. Carter issued no statement after the meeting. The black leaders, who called a caucus of all black delegates to report on the session, said that Mr. Carter had renewed his pledge to name blacks to high-level jobs, including positions in areas in which blacks have not served.

"These are jobs outside of traditional black areas in [the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and Urban Development and the areas of civil rights]," Mr. Diggs said in an interview.

Mr. Carter told the group to submit to him within two weeks a list of jobs that should go to blacks, as well as the names of potential appointees. In April, Mr. Carter had told black leaders to do that at a meeting in Charlotte, N.C. Mr. Diggs said the list had not been put together, "but it'll be done now."

Further, Mr. Diggs reported,

Mr. Carter committed himself to a voter registration campaign in the black community similar to the major drives of the 1960s. This, Mr. Diggs said, means funding for black organizations, such as the Voter Education Project, to conduct such drives.

Plea Made for Bradley

The group also pressed Mr. Carter to nominate a black for Vice-President. Mr. Diggs and Mr. Hatcher said they considered it an insult that Mr. Carter had mentioned Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles several weeks ago, but had not met with Mr. Bradley as he had with other prospective candidates.

"He told us that his Vice-Presidential candidate would be from Washington, and that eliminated consideration of any Mayor," Mr. Diggs commented.

Both Mr. Hatcher and Mr. Diggs said they were satisfied with that explanation.

56 Hosts to Delegates Delight in Their Role

Fifty-six New Yorkers are having a wonderful time showing convention delegates a wonderful time.

The host program for the Democratic National Convention consists of New Yorkers who volunteered to dispense hospitality to the 50 state and six territorial delegations.

The hosts are inviting delegates to their homes, arranging private tours of museums and stores and dispensing information, aid, comfort and refreshments to the delegates.

"Law me!" exclaimed a Georgia delegate, surveying a splendid view of the city from a window of Thomas Goldstein's apartment on Central Park West.

"Did you hear that?" one member of the New York host committee whispered to another. "She actually said, 'Law me.'"

Whereupon both New Yorkers beamed at the delegate as though she had just produced an exotic witticism. ("Law me" is the Georgia equivalent for "holly gee.")

The delegates to the Democratic convention seem to be approaching New York City with some trepidation, but they are being feted to a fare-thee-well by New Yorkers, who are determined to be delighted with them.

The host program might just as well be called Friends of Tom Baer. The energetic Mr. Baer, a lawyer, was pressed into service on the Citizens Committee for the Democratic National Convention and assigned to set up the host program.

"In fact, I did pick people I know or people recommended by people I know," because I'm a firm believer in not getting "names" but real doers. I chose people who are New Yorkers with a passion. We felt that every delegation needed a host, and some of the smallest delegations got the very best ones."

The three delegates from Guam and the three from the Canal Zone have been left to the care of Christopher Cerf, an editor and writer, and Henry Beard, writer and one of the founders of The National Lampoon. Mr. Baer was Mr. Cerf's sergeant in the National Guard.

Mr. Cerf and Mr. Beard planned for the arrival of the Guamanians and the delegates from the Canal Zone with the slightly manic glee of a National Lampoon plot. Their original plan called for a stalemated convention, with Guam and the Canal Zone holding the balance of power. They were going to furnish their delegates with a smoke-filled room. After Jimmy Carter put an end to that plan, Mr. Cerf and Mr. Beard decided to hold a regular party instead.

"The Republicans," said Mr. Beard with exquisite disgust, "don't even have delegates from the Canal Zone. And they're the ones who've made such a stink about the canal."

All the delegations are being subjected to the finest hospitality that the New Yorkers can provide. But the Georgia delegation—Jimmy Carter's home state—is a shade more equal than others. The Georgians were greeted at the Goldstein's brunch yesterday by the city Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin; William vanden Heuvel, a member of the New York Host Committee and New York chairman of the Carter campaign, and a number of other outgoing New Yorkers.

Chores Found Rewarding

After Mr. Goldstein had assigned all the tours scheduled for the Georgians—Wall Street, Harlem, Bloomingdale's, The New York Times and NBC—Mr. vanden Heuvel appended another. "It's not on your schedule," he said, "but we'll rendezvous at 5 tonight at the statue of General Sherman and blow it up." The proposal provoked prolonged applause from the Georgians.

With the round of breakfasts, brunches, lunches, cocktails, dinners, receptions and all-purpose parties set up by the New York hosts, the schedule for the delegates sounds rather like an Alka-Seltzer commercial.

But many of the hosts are finding their chores rewarding. Jackie Litwellyn, whose husband, Bruce, heads the organization 100 Black Men, finds that hospitality goes both ways with Hawaiians. She said:

"I went out to meet them at the airport and the poor things were exhausted—10 hours on the plane. But they put a lei around me and gave me a kiss. They brought boxes of beautiful flowers with them."

Shirley Leopold, whose husband, Vernon, is a delegate from Detroit, said, "I think all of New York City is a host committee. It's just fantastic."

The Leopolds wandered around the Lower East Side Sunday and wound up in a small bar in Soho, where all the patrons participated in drawing up a list of good restaurants for them. The Leopolds then went to The Bottom Line, a nightclub, where they were given a special table.

Al Belmonte, a labor delegate from Los Angeles, found that the hospitality offset the shock of New York prices—65 cents for a cup of coffee at the Statler Hilton Hotel.

Bill Mainelli, who is the hostess for the Rhode Island delegation, was so excited about her group that she went to Rhode Island to meet them before the convention, to find out what they would want and need during their stay in New York.

Margaret Heipmann, who is on Governor Carey's staff, is enchanted with her Mississippi delegation and looks after them like a benign mother hen.

After the session, Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., who was chairman of the coalition of blacks, said the group was unanimous in its support of Mr. Carter. This was the Mayor's first endorsement of Mr. Carter.

Others at the meeting who had not announced their support, or whose support had been lukewarm, included Jesse L. Jackson, the civil rights leader; Antonio Harrisoo, Alabama state representative, and Representatives Charles B. Diggs Jr. of Michigan and Yvonne B. Burke of California.

Mr. Carter issued no statement after the meeting. The black leaders, who called a caucus of all black delegates to report on the session, said that Mr. Carter had renewed his pledge to name blacks to high-level jobs, including positions in areas in which blacks have not served.

"These are jobs outside of traditional black areas in [the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and Urban Development and the areas of civil rights]," Mr. Diggs said in an interview.

Mr. Carter told the group to submit to him within two weeks a list of jobs that should go to blacks, as well as the names of potential appointees. In April, Mr. Carter had told black leaders to do that at a meeting in Charlotte, N.C. Mr. Diggs said the list had not been put together, "but it'll be done now."

Further, Mr. Diggs reported,

Mr. Carter committed himself to a voter registration campaign in the black community similar to the major drives of the 1960s. This, Mr. Diggs said, means funding for black organizations, such as the Voter Education Project, to conduct such drives.

The group also pressed Mr. Carter to nominate a black for Vice-President. Mr. Diggs and Mr. Hatcher said they considered it an insult that Mr. Carter had mentioned Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles several weeks ago, but had not met with Mr. Bradley as he had with other prospective candidates.

"He told us that his Vice-Presidential candidate would be from Washington, and that eliminated consideration of any Mayor," Mr. Diggs commented.

Both Mr. Hatcher and Mr. Diggs said they were satisfied with that explanation.

Mrs. Carter Seeks Help Of Professional Women

By JUDY KLEMESRUP

Rosalynn Carter spent the opening day of the Democratic National Convention yesterday in much the same way as she has spent most of the last 14 months, campaigning for her husband and "best friend," Jimmy Carter.

"I'm so impressed with you, both as a group and individually," she told 100 women at a luncheon sponsored by the Women's Forum Inc., a three-year-old organization of prominent New York professional women. "It's so important to get together to identify capable women. Jimmy's going to need you. And we need your help."

The 48-year-old Mrs. Carter, who was wearing a simply tailored, cornflower-blue dress and navy patent pumps, was the guest of honor at the roast beef luncheon, which was attended by 50 women delegates to the convention—one chosen at random from each state.

"I've always worked," Mrs. Carter told the feminist-oriented crowd, which met in a private dining room of The New York Times. "I kept the books for our peanut business. A mutual respect developed between Jimmy and me because I kept the books. He asked me, 'How's this going?' and 'How's that doing?' So I became an adviser to him."

"We Talk Things Out"

"I'm not as important an adviser to him as some people say," she went on, "but he does listen to me. When we disagree—and we do—we talk things out."

Among those who attended the luncheon were Lieut. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak, Mary Beame, Betty Friedan, the feminist author; Elinor Guggenheimer, the New York City Consumer Affairs Commissioner; Muriel Siebert, the first woman to buy a seat on the New York Stock Exchange; Eleanor Holmes Norton, the city's Commissioner of Human Rights; Jacqueline Wexler, president of Hunter College; Phyllis Cerf Wagner, wife of the former Mayor; Eleanor Perry, the screenwriter; and Betty Furoess, the television personality.

Mrs. Carter, who is usually shy and reserved, had a flair for humor, which is why her husband has campaigned so long. "He didn't have to tell me to go to the campaign every day," she stayed at home."

Mrs. Friedan, who produced at the luncheon mother of us all a ward that she had the Carter was "green" and her mother had and I have a red. I even asked to have taken with me," she said.

"Very Good Day"

After the luncheon Carter denied in a statement that she and her daughter Lillian Carter, were a best of terms.

"I can't imagine," she said, "how she came from," she said to a newspaper editor the two women are along. "We're not friends. She talks Amy the Carter's [daughter] so I can't campaign."

The previous evening Carter also denied it. "It's a big lie," she said. "I don't know how it got started. Maybe I never discuss her private person."

Later yesterday Rosalynn Carter gave vision interviews and her husband's inter Adlai E. Stevenson's 23rd Vice President date.

"She's been in on a interviews," a spokesman said. "I don't know if she'll input in the decision. Last night, Mrs. Carter attended the official convention in Square Garden, as by her mother-in-law, Carter's three sons, Chip, 26 and Jeff, 22, wives. They sat in known as the "V.I.P. s

Carter Compromises the Role of Women in Party

Jimmy Carter as he conferred yesterday at the Americana with a negotiating team of leading Democratic feminists. The negotiators later said Mr. Carter's position on the future role of women in the party was acceptable to them.

equally apparent that his commitments on several issues fell short of what the party's feminists wanted.

For example, on the key issue of wording of the rules for insuring enlarged participation of women in the 1980 convention, the negotiations yesterday resulted in language that was stronger in two respects than the proposal Mr. Carter turned down on Sunday but was weaker in one respect.

'Equal Division' in '78

One strengthening was a commitment to "promote equal division between delegate men and delegate women," starting with the 1978 midterm Democratic conference, rather than the 1980 convention, as the earlier version had it.

Mrs. Abzug also cited as an improvement a sentence that said, "The national party shall encourage and assist state parties to adopt provisions to achieve this goal [of equal numbers of women delegates] in their delegate-selection plans."

The language rejected by Mr. Carter on Sunday was, "The national party shall take all feasible steps to assist state parties to incorporate this goal in their delegate-selection plans for the 1980 convention."

Mrs. Abzug said the new language was stronger in that the phrase "adopt provisions" was substituted for "incorporate this goal."

She did not mention the elimination of the phrase "all feasible steps" and the substitution of the weaker word "encourage."

The phrase committing the party to take "all feasible steps" to promote equal representation was precisely the one that had caused Mr. Carter to reject the earlier proposal.

Some key party leaders, in particular Robert S. Strauss, the national chairman, objected to the language as authorizing, and even requiring, what they felt was too much intervention in decisions at the state level.

An area in which the women appear to have got less than they sought dealt with the membership of key party organizations, such as the one that will write some new rules governing the 1980 primaries; and the one that will deal with delegate-selection challenges in 1980.

Mrs. Abzug reported that Mr. Carter had agreed to "full" representation of women on all party commissions and committees. The feminists were known to have sought "equal" representation on these groups, and the difference in language appeared to be significant.

Women in the Cabinet

Mr. Carter was also said to have told the women that he would appoint women to the Cabinet and to ambassadorial posts. "You can depend on it," he reportedly told them.

He promised that, if he was elected President, he would consider a woman for the first Supreme Court vacancy that occurred after the election, to seek qualified women for appointments to other judicial posts, and to make judicial appointments solely on the basis of merit, not political considerations.

He also promised to "consult personally" on campaign strategy with a group of women to be chosen for that purpose by the women's caucus. The caucus did not vote yesterday to accept the Carter commitments as satisfactory because there was not time to notify all of the women delegates and alternates of the meeting.

Among the women delegates themselves, the most vehement opposition to abandoning plans for a floor fight appeared to be centered in the California delegation.

Much of the other strong talk against accepting any compromises came from women who were not delegates, such as Karen DeCraw, president of the National Organization for Women. She and anyone else who wished was permitted to attend the women's caucus meeting and to speak, but those who were not delegates or alternates could not make motions or vote. The same rules will prevail for this morning's meeting.

In the confusion of yesterday's women's caucus, it was not possible to tell with certainty how much sentiment for a fight existed among delegates and alternates, but it appeared to be relatively small.

A formal motion that the compromise language on the 1980 convention rules be agreed to was made by state Senator Karen S. Burstein of Long Island. This is the motion that will be before today's meeting.

The Democrats are an energetic lot. They spent the first day of their national convention going to two or three luncheons topped by three to five cocktail receptions. By the time the gavel slammed the opening session to attention, they were stuffed.

They had been out on the town eating and drinking everything from milk punch with Creole poached eggs to vodka with little bits of toast smeared with peanut butter and sprinkled with bacon. There was no avoiding the peanuts. They were determined to keep up.

Some Democrats were even getting the hang of it. They learned that excepting invitations to two sitdown meals at the same time in different places was a mistake. They began to understand why the ideal convention party has always been an emporium stand-up phenomenon with drinks, something resembling a buffet and plenty of heavy hors d'oeuvre. There was hope for their survival.

"I am not fond of what I call that famous hors d'oeuvre act," Robin Duke said. "But with the traffic and the convention at 8, I don't see any other way. I just nibble up junk food along the way."

Mrs. Duke's husband, Angier Biddle Duke, is chairman of the city Democratic committee, and she gave two parties yesterday. Her noon-time buffet at home started out to honor Senator Stuart Symington of Missouri.

Before it ended, it had grown to include friends from the days when Mr. Duke was protocol chief in the Kennedy Administration; United Nations diplomats and a long list of Jimmy Carter's closest Atlanta friends.

"The Georgians aren't household words yet," Mrs. Duke explained. "But give them time. By next week, you'll be hearing about them everywhere."

Making the Scene at Those 'Hors d'Oeuvres'

They included Philip Al-

ston, the lawyer whose Sea Island, Ga., home the Carters visited recently; Anne Cox Chambers, whose family newspapers supported Mr. Carter against then Gov. Lester G. Maddox in their gubernatorial race; and Mrs. Charles Yarn, the wife of a plastic surgeon who has been Mr. Carter's guiding ecologist.

Mrs. Duke fed her guests gazpacho, shrimp, crab, chicken and salad. They could help themselves from the cold buffet anytime until 3 P.M.

"People are eating on the run," she said. "It's hard to be very grand."

Simultaneous Parties

The Dukes' second party was the vast reception that they and Dr. Robert S. Hirschfield organized at the Statler. It was for Mayor Beame (who had his own party, simultaneously), Robert S. Strauss and Mr. Charles Lainie Kazan and Linda Hopkins sang. Bill Crystal did impersonations. Mrs. Duke ate the hors d'oeuvres that were her dinner.

"If I'm lucky," she said, "maybe I'll get a hot dog at the hall."

By the time Congresswoman Corinne C. Boggs took her place on the platform, she had already put in a grueling day. She was glad to sit down.

Mrs. Boggs's hairdresser went to her hotel room at 8 A.M. At 8:45, she met over the allocation of time to the convention's co-chairmen. By 10, she was giving her own brunch at Crowlady's, a New Orleans-style restaurant.

Afterwards, she worked on the speech that she will give at today's sessions. 5 to two luncheons. they were both buffed. Then she went to 6 meetings, climbed a platform in the empty practice her speech to three receptions. She ran into Paul and Senator Birch. They were making rounds, too.

"I think I'm having parties while I'm in New York," she said, "and a little confusing."

Yes, but better than ing a sprained ankle. is Jody Powell's car Mr. Powell, who is Mr. Powell's press secretary, was the result of a touch football.

Asked if this didn't be and the Carters were getting more and like the Kennedys ever be laughed.

"No," he said. "The difference. They wear shoes and we play in a formation from."

When the Cold Winds Begin to Blow—Hoods Within Hoods

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Hats—serious hats, that is—aren't warming up in the wings, ready to launch a fresh assault on fashion in the fall. Still, there will be little need for ears to get cold. Practically every designer, from the stolid to the wild, has taken to hoods, in one of those rare gestures of agreement that sweep the fashion world from time to time.

Since this is an era of layering, the hoods needn't come singly. The sweater can have a cowl that turns up into a hood. The jacket over it can be hooded and so, in fact, can the coat, cape or poncho that forms the outermost layer of clothing.

It all reminds some long-time observers of fashion of the shoulder-pad phenomenon in clothes of the 1940's.

Then, the blouse had shoulder pads, the jacket had bigger pads and the coat's inner structure squared and extended the shoulders even further. So a reasonably slim woman in an ordinary daytime outfit resembled a quarterback in full field regalia, at least around the shoulders.

Today's hoods also appear singly, in close-to-the-head helmet-like styles that are either attached to a dress or sweater, or big, floppy affairs that are part of a coat. In case the protection is not enough, the coat hoods can be pulled over knitted capes.

Hoods have their own character. Calvin Klein likes to add leather aviator's styles and glasses to his trench coats for a dashing foreign intrigue look. Geoffrey Beene rins his exotic hammered satin hoods for evening in fur.

Bonnie Cashin usually attaches hoods to her jersey dresses because, she insists, she's a Californian who has never quite gotten used to the arctic weather in New York. Adele Simpson's hoods for fall are usually separate and tacked into the neckline of her dresses so her customers can take them up or let them go.

Gloria Vanderbilt, who made her debut in the fashion world recently, established the hood as her signature. Her version is rather medieval, gathered on a drawstring top and bottom, and designed to form a flattering Pierrot-like ruffle around the neck when it is dropped down. Miss Vanderbilt said she believes that softness around the face is a sine qua non of fashion.

An offshoot of the trend to hoods is the revival of the babushka or head scarf. Of course, it is possible to wrap a square or triangle around the head in such a way that it resembles a hood. Head wrappings in one form or another have been quite popular for a while.

But now the pure head scarf returns as an accessory to the modest peasant revival launched by such designers as Oscar de la Renta, and Donna Karan at Anne Klein. Their Russian-looking satin or flowered challis blouses and skirts, mainly for evening, come equipped with matching babushka. Adds to the authenticity.

It's not for style alone that hoods are employed. There's no question but that they feel quite cozy—and they can be quite helpful in a gale or a downpour. Of course, there are hazards. They can crush a coiffure as easily as a hat and if they are not constructed properly, they can fall down.

But they are emerging as surely a sign of the new season as the long, knitted scarf of a couple of years back. With some knitted gloves and the obligatory boots, they will help insure a warm winter, no matter what the weather is like.

Adult Amusements: Cars, Carts and a Little Zoo

By RUTH ROBINSON

Grown-ups who are self-conscious about playing with children's toys need have no reservations about toying with the miniature wooden cars, tricycles, windmills, carts and animals that Nick Lecakes makes specifically for this purpose.

Mr. Lecakes, a recreational therapist by profession, probably spends more man-hours a week working on his "adult toys" than he does at his regular job on the pediatric floor at Bellevue Hospital. "I'm a wood freak," he said, "I love wood. It has a smell and a feel and a life to it."

A purist, he leaves the clear pine in its natural state, allowing the beauty of the grain to make its own statement. The one concession Mr. Lecakes makes is the use of leather for the bridle on a rocking horse, one of a series of animal rockers that to date embraces the giraffe, elephant, frog, bear and, the craftsman's own particular favorite, kangaroo with baby in pouch.

The original design and still one of the most engaging is the tricycle with neatly pegged seat (Mr. Lecakes never uses nails) and pedals that actually turn. The car, a sporty roadster, is the most tactile. The top lifts off, the doors swing open on wooden hinges and the steering wheel manipulates the front wheels. In fact the car does so much it's almost a letdown to find the rumble seat is a fake.

The toys are sold at Inge Nissen, 165 East 61st Street. Prices range from $25 for the cart to $35 for the roadster. Mr. Lecakes accepts special orders for work in woods other than pine.

There is now a guidebook for the flea market freak. It's called, "Where 2,000 Antique Shows and Flea Markets Are," and as the title suggests, it lists over 2,000 flea markets, antique fairs and specialty bazaars within a 450-mile radius of New York City.

The book, written by Barbara Beddoe and Marie Baxter Pace, was designed for dealers as well as the public. Details include locations of the fairs, dates, type of merchandise and distance from New York. The paperback will shortly be available at Brentano's for $5.95.

Planning Pressure like Hospitals Settle

By DAVID BIRD

"They are on 12-hour shifts," Mrs. Bakst said, "and they can't even come out of there for a cup of coffee."

Not all hospitals reported difficulties. At Southside Hospital in Bay Shore, L.I., the only hospital outside New York City being struck, Dr. Kenneth LeVites, the chief resident said: "It seems the hospital has never run this smoothly."

He noted that while the occupancy rate at the 500-bed hospital had dropped as low as 27% on Sunday, it was back up to 300 yesterday.

Dr. LeVites attributed the smoothness of operations to community volunteers, who have been "inundating" the hospital with their services.

But the State Health Department reported generally declining occupancy rates at the city's major hospitals, which generally operate at full capacity. Presbyterian Hospital was down to 49 percent occupancy, Montefiore down to 51 percent, and Long Island Jewish down to 52 percent.

Pattern Not Uniform

Although the occupancy trend was down, the pattern was not uniform. Mount Sinai Hospital was reported at 81 percent occupancy, and Lutheran Medical Center in Brooklyn at 103 percent.

Dr. J. Warren Toff, the associate state health commissioner for New York City affairs, whose staff compiled the occupancy statistics, said the lack of beds filled in the private nonprofit hospitals was no "medical emergency."

He said "there still are available beds in the municipal hospitals and in the non-profit private [profit-making] hospitals."

The strike did not have serious impact on the city hospitals, because only about 1,500 of their 39,000 employees are members of District 1199.

At Cumberland Hospital, a municipal institution in the Fort Greene section of Brooklyn, all outpatient service was halted by the executive director, Inder Persaud.

Patients were directed to the emergency room, where Mildred Johnston, a physician's assistant, said the number of people seeking attention was "comparatively small for a Monday morning."

"Maybe they heard about the strike," she said.

Mr. Persaud said he had closed the outpatient services because he wanted his staff prepared for emergencies. A spokesman for the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation said none of the other municipal hospitals had had to take such a step.

Issues in Hospital Strike

PARTIES—District 1199, National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees representing 35,000 workers, most of whom are nonprofessionals. Thirty-three hospitals, 27 belonging to the League of Voluntary Hospitals and Homes of New York. Fourteen nursing homes, including nine belonging to the league. Ten municipal hospitals that have affiliations to voluntary hospitals.

ISSUES—The union seeks at least a cost-of-living increase, which was recommended last month by a three-man Federal fact-finding panel. The union says that under the contract that expired on June 30, about three-quarters of its members earned $181 a week while the highest wages for senior social workers and social work supervisors, ranged from $18,788 to $23,541. The hospitals say the proportion of workers earning $181 a week is 25 to 30 percent, and that they have no money for any increases, since the state has put a limit on Medicaid and Blue Cross payments that now make up most of the hospitals' income. The unions have agreed to arbitration, but the hospitals have refused to do so, saying they have no money to pay any award by an arbitrator.

HOSPITALS UNION WOOS DELEGATES

Rally Across From Garden Seeks Strike Support

Thousands of striking hospital workers sought to attract help for their cause from Democratic National Convention delegates last night with a rally on 33d Street across from Madison Square Garden.

For the occasion they had an especially composed lyric, that went in part as follows:

We'd like to ask you
For your attention
We're fighting harder
Like Jimmy Carter
In a union that fights for you and me.

The strikers carried signs declaring, "We Can't Work for Peanuts," the commodity that Mr. Carter raises in his home state of Georgia. Other slogans said: "To The Delegates: Be Democratic, Support Our Fight" and "A Living Wage, Not a Living Wage."

Police officials estimated 3,000 had gathered by 7 P.M. for the two-hour assembly that featured a talk by Leon J. Devis, the union's president. Mr. Devis addressed the rally shortly after 7 o'clock, then suffered a brief fainting spell as he left the platform. An aide said afterward that "we're sure he's all right," and noted that Mr. Devis was "very tired and had not eaten all day."

The 62-year-old union leader was helped into a car and left by 7:30, the rally was over. The demonstrators boarded buses to return to their picket lines.

Blue handbills distributed by the strikers headlined a message circulated over the weekend: "Welcome to New York—But Don't Get Sick Here!" However, the handbills had been revised to remove criticism and substitute kind words for Governor Carey.

The revised version said: "Gov. Hugh Carey yesterday urged both sides to accept binding arbitration. We said fine, that's what we wanted all along. Management refused."

This replaced an earlier version that had said Governor Carey was "one of the reasons we're out on the sidewalk instead of where we'd rather be—tending patients." That version had described the Governor as failing to intercede despite months of union pleas to avert the strike.

Moe Foner, the union's executive secretary, presided at the rally. It was his brother, Henry Foner, president of the joint board of the Fur, Leather and Machine Workers Union, who wrote lyrics to the melody, "This Land Is Your Land," citing Mr. Carter as a model fighter, and describing the union cause as an effort "to win protection against inflation."

Hospital Strike Paradox

Though Employers Fight Arbitration, Unions Generally Take That Position

By LEE DEMBART

In a strange turn of events, the hospital workers strike has become a "militant struggle for binding arbitration," in the words of Moe Foner, the union's executive secretary. It is strange because unions generally resist binding arbitration as an invasion of their right to bargain and strike. But in this case, the union, District 1199, has virtually nothing to lose by submitting the dispute to arbitration, and the League of Voluntary Hospitals has virtually nothing to gain, and is therefore resisting.

Compulsory arbitration of labor disputes is common in matters involving grievances under existing contracts, but it is fairly uncommon in disputes over a new contract. Robert Coulson, president of the American Arbitration Association, said yesterday that more than 98 percent of the 12,000 labor disputes the association arbitrates each year were grievance arbitrations.

Generally, management and labor would sooner go to the mat, if necessary, and settle a new contract themselves than give it to a third party to settle, with all of the risk and uncertainty that binding arbitration involves.

In the New York hospital strike, the union offered to go to arbitration in mid-June. But the hospitals believe that arbitrators try to compromise disputes and would award the workers some raise, which, the hospitals feel, they cannot afford.

'Imprudent' Decision

"When you have arbitrators, they're not judges," said an official of the hospital league, who asked not to be identified. "They don't say guilty or not guilty. They try to reach some sort of compromise."

"The union has nothing to lose. We would be committing an imprudent management decision to commit ourselves to something we don't have the money for and have been told we won't get the money for."

The union disputes the contention. Mr. Foner said that binding arbitration was as much a risk for the union as for the hospitals.

"They say they have no money," Mr. Foner said. "Let a fact-finder look at the books. It's a risk. We may come out with nothing. An arbitrator may look at the thing and say, 'You know, these people are stone broke. They just can't pay it.' We take that risk."

Vincent D. McDonnell, the chairman of the State Mediation Board, also disagreed with the hospitals. "An arbitrator does not look for a compromise," Mr. McDonnell said.

Roles Defined

"In mediation," he said, "the mediator has to determine the ambit of expectation of the parties and strike a delicate balance. But an arbitrator, on the other hand, after he listens to the facts can come up and say the union should get nothing."

"If I were arbitrating this matter I would clearly take into consideration the ability to pay. For the hospital management to sit back and say they're not going to arbitrate because they don't know what will happen connotes that they're going to select some luncheon as the arbitrator."

With a few exceptions, where

Fewer Spotted on Streets as Measure Takes Effect

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

Law enforcement officials reported that fewer prostitutes were walking along midtown streets yesterday—the day after a strict anti-loitering law went into effect.

"The prostitutes are definitely aware of the law," said Carl Ravens, the commanding officer of the Manhattan South Precinct, which covers Manhattan south of 59th Street.

According to Assistant Chief Ravens, nine arrests were made in the precinct between 8 A.M. Sunday and 8 A.M. Monday under the new law, which prohibits loitering for "the purpose of engaging in prostitution."

"We've been busy with a lot of other things," said Mr. Ravens.

Robert M. Morgenthau, the Manhattan District Attorney, and William J. Gallagher, the attorney in charge of the criminal defense division of the Legal Aid Society, said it was a relatively quiet day in the arraignment parts of Manhattan Criminal Court.

Late yesterday afternoon, on Eighth Avenue between 38th and 44th Streets, fewer than six women who appeared to be prostitutes were visible on the street—a fraction of the number normally seen on a pleasant summer afternoon.

"You're a cop, aren't you?" said one woman, standing in a doorway on Eighth Avenue between 40th and 41st Streets. "Let me see your identification. You look just like a cop."

Several other women who appeared to be prostitutes were sitting in restaurants and bars along Eighth Avenue.

Later, in the evening, once the Democratic convention had begun, the stretch of Eighth Avenue was relatively deserted.

"The girls are being much more discreet," said one police officer who was patrolling Eighth Avenue between 42d and 43d Streets.

Under the new law, which is opposed by civil liberties and women's groups and has already been challenged in court as unconstitutionally vague by the Legal Aid Society, loitering in a "public place" for the purpose of engaging in prostitution is forbidden.

In the statute, a "public place" is defined as a street, sidewalk, bridge, alley, parking lot or doorway.

The original version of the bill, which was introduced by Manfred Ohrenstein, the State Senate minority leader, did not specifically define "public place." But an amendment was added in an effort to avoid possible police raids of restaurants, bars and other buildings.

In addition, yesterday several women were standing in hallways of massage parlors, a few feet off the street. Often these parlors serve as fronts for prostitution.

The law, which is designed to facilitate the arrests of pimps, prostitutes and their patrons, forbids "any person" from repeatedly beckoning, stopping, attempting to stop or interfering with "the free passage of other persons" for the purpose of prostitution.

Chess: When a Hypermodern Wall Comes Hypertumbling Down

BY ROBERT BYRNE

Nothing comes down with quite the awful crash that accompanies a hypermodernism that misfires. When you yield the center to your opponent in the hope of crumbling it later, you have to have everything figured out perfectly, for if that center doesn't collapse, it will collapse you.

That is what happened in the game between John Federowicz of the New York Threatics and Robert Eberlein of the Washington Plumbers in the National Chess League. Eberlein's victory helped him to achieve the highest individual score in league play, 7½-½, and went a long way toward making the Plumbers the league champions.

Federowicz's unusual knight development, 5 N-KR3 kept the diagonal of his fianchettoed bishop open and looked toward a later N-B4 to put pressure on the black QP after it had advanced to Q4. But instead of following through with 9 N-B4, P-Q5; 10 N/3-Q5, N-N; 11 N-N, B-Q3; 12 P-K4, he played the weaker 9 B-N5.

He probably thought that after 9... P-Q5; 10 Q-BxN, B-N; 11 N-R4, Eberlein would be unable to defend his QBP, but 11... P-QN3 must have sent his hopes for the game into a nosedive.

The point was that 12 BxN, BxN only furthers Black's development. As a result, Eberlein's center pawns became rock solid and the cramping black QP gave him a powerful advantage.

Eberlein methodically completed his development and doubled rooks with 21... R/2-K2, mounting crushing pressure against the awkward KP. Federowicz's abysmal lack of space made it impossible for him to find useful squares for his knights, thus confining him to hopeless passivity.

Eberlein's 23... B-N2 threatened 24... N-N5; 25 Q-Q2, BxR, winning a piece, and after 24 B-N2, Q-R1, he again threatened 25... N-N5 as well as 25

Position after 24... Q-R1

... NxP. There was then no way to save material except by 25 BxN, BxR; 26 K-N1, and that was unthinkable since 26... Q-B1, 27... B-QR1 and 28... Q-N2 would have set up a fatal mate threat on the loog diagonal.

It would have been inferior to rush with 27... P-B4, since 28 P-QR3, N-B3? blunders into the trap 29 N-B6ch, BxN; 30 BxRch, and white wins. Eberlein, however, had no need for speed and avoided all problems by picking off a pawn with 27... NxRP.

After dropping the knight to 30... P-N, Federowicz could well have given up, but he continued on in the hope that Eberlein would be caught in a time forfeit. Consequently, he had to part with more material, losing the exchange to the fork 31... N-B7.

Eberlein's return of the exchange with 34... R-N7 thus bringing about useful simplification, was a wise concession to his time pressure. His clock situation flustered him so much, however, that he overlooked picking up the queen by 40... RxQ. Of course, that didn't matter—he was only too happy to arrive at the move 40 time control with any kind of decent move.

Federowicz, forgetting that Eberlein suddenly had oceans of time at his disposal for move 41, again put his queen en prise and had to resign when it was taken.

Bridge: Metropolitan Life Enjoys Dominance in Local League

BY ALAN TRUSCOTT

In recent years the competitions of the Metropolitan Commercial Bridge League, open to all business teams, have been dominated in remarkable fashion by the teams of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Earlier this year, the insurance company's competitors won the major title for the fifth time in six years, and their teams won two lesser titles.

The winning Metropolitan Life team in the 1975-76 championship was composed of Constant Queller, Roo Gerard, Zack Granovetter, Jim Hicks, Mike Sydlasko, Don Liso, Shelly Einhorn and Stan Slater. Ron Kraft, Charles Grealey, Herman Seltzer and Dick Deitz were alternates.

Metropolitan had a problem in winning its latest victory. One of the key players, Gerard, resigned from the company before the end of the season, and Deitz was called on to form an improvised partnership with Miss Queller. They had a bidding difficulty in the diagrammed deal and landed in the wrong slam contract.

Deitz was right to jump to two hearts at his second turn after the one-diamond response, but he should have followed this with three diamonds, completing the description of his pattern. As it was, he never managed to show his diamond fit, and landed in a tricky no-trump slam when six diamonds would have been simple.

North's four no-trump bid was intended as a natural invitation to slam, but South treated it as Blackwood.

West was allowed to win the first trick with the heart, a play that opened squeeze possibilities. West would have done best to continue with the heart queen or to shift to a spade. Instead, he shifted to a diamond, which was passive but fatal.

South won the diamond lead in his hand and led three rounds of clubs. When this suit failed to break, he played diamonds and reached this position:

NORTH	EAST
♠ A Q 9	♠ J 10 8
♦ —	♦ J
♥ A 8

As West had been left with the task of protecting hearts, he had had to let go a spade. So a lead of the heart jack to the ace ruined East, who had to let go a spade in his turn. The spade queen was finessed, and dummy scored the last three tricks to bring home the slam.

The analytically minded will note that the defense could have done better if East had saved hearts and allowed his partner to keep spades. South would then have regretted his failure to play diamonds before clubs, West led the heart king, which would have led to an effective squeeze against any defense.

In the bridge column diagram yesterday, the hearts and spades of the West hand were accidentally transposed. West should have had ♠ K ♣ J 7 5.

The winners of titles in the Shore tournament of the New Jersey Bridge League at Point Pleasant during the weekend were:

- Womens Pairs—B. Smith, East Windsor, and D. Stoddard, West Deal.
- Masters Pairs—G. Scheck, Manasquan, and R. Bennek, Princeton.
- Swiss Teams—R. Celler, Madison; R. Ryder, Caldwell; F. Burstein, Springfield; W. Dimler, Basking Ridge.
- Non-Masters Pairs—R. Hummel, Bricktown, and R. Segan, Tom's River.

Les Whitten, the veteran investigative reporter who shares Jack Anderson's byline, has written a novel about sex, payoffs and power in Washington that exposes the real world behind the recent, shocking headlines.

"It's wonderful reading," says the Washington Post; "full of nifty-gritty details about investigative reporting, scandalous gossip about government officials, some of the more charming sex scenes in recent memory, and a thoroughly engaging cast of characters."

"Highly realistic," says Clark Mollenhoff. "Sex in high-level politics seems to parallel the lives of a few present and past Washington political figures."

Vice-Presidential Candidate

The most important decision Governor Carter is likely to make for a very long time to come is the decision he has to arrive at within the next two days—if he has not reached it already. It is a decision of vital significance, not only for the prospective Presidential nominee and for the Democratic Party but, more to the point, for the American people. It is the selection of the Democrat best qualified for the Vice Presidency of the United States.

The traditional method employed by both parties in choosing their Vice-Presidential nominee has little to recommend it, and the results have often proved the point. The potential (and, in too many cases in recent years, the actual) successor to the Presidency has normally been appointed by the successful Presidential candidate, and anointed by the party convention—with thought only for real or imagined political advantage, and with virtually no thought of the standards requisite for holding the world's most important public office. As we noted last week, and many times in the past, some better method must be devised. But until it is, the procedure now being followed by Governor Carter, who has had the unusual advantage of time to give this matter the attention it deserves, is probably the best that could be worked out.

His specific choice, however, has not yet been named; and Mr. Carter must realize that a good deal of his credibility as the Presidential nominee of his party may rest on this particular decision, i.e., on the individual whom he chooses to be his running mate. In a way that is unprecedented in recent years, the eyes of the nation are focused on the Democratic selection for the Vice Presidency; rarely if ever in this century has the country been so conscious of the importance of the choice. And the choice will be Governor Carter's, his alone to make; the responsibility rests on him and on him alone.

The seven members of Congress Mr. Carter named as the group from whom he would make his selection include at least three Senators clearly qualified for the Vice-Presidential office on grounds of experience, ability and character, and also because they represent the philosophy of Democratic liberalism in foreign as well as domestic policy, to which, we believe, Governor Carter has basically adhered.

In this group are Senator Muskie, Senator Mondale and Senator Church; in it might well have been included Representative Udall, Mr. Carter's closest rival for the nomination, whose name was regrettably omitted by the victor from those under consideration.

It is natural for Governor Carter to wish to have a Vice President entirely compatible with his own views and one with whom he will be "comfortable"; but at the same time he needs to pick as running mate a man of outstanding and proven quality, and one in line with the liberal traditions of the mainstream of his party.

Mexico's New President...

José López Portillo has, as expected, been elected overwhelmingly as the new President of Mexico to succeed Luis Echeverría Alvarez next Dec. 1. It would miss the point to emphasize the obvious: Mr. López Portillo was the only official candidate and his triumph was a foregone conclusion.

More important, in Mexico's unique circumstances, is the fact that he spent many months campaigning throughout the country, selling himself as though he had immediate opposition and seeking to get a feeling for the nation's problems as seen from the grass roots. One result of his intensive effort may have been his success in reversing the hitherto rising trend of abstention from voting, which had previously suggested a growing alienation of the citizenry from Mexico's ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

Mexico's basic long-term problem, with which Mr. López Portillo will have to struggle, is the population explosion. Here is a classic case of a nation whose death rate has been reduced sharply by modern advances in public health and medicine while its birth rate continues extraordinarily high. The result is a rate of natural increase sufficient to double the population every 20 to 25 years.

The corollary of that rapid population growth is a nation that has an extraordinarily large percentage of children and adolescents, as well as increasing numbers of young people coming of age annually and requiring ing jobs whose availability cannot be increased as rapidly as the growth in population. The result is a huge rate of unemployment and grinding poverty in much of the nation's rural areas as well as in the extensive and rapidly increasing urban slums.

In these conditions the surprise is not that there have been signs of political dissidence, as in the student explosion of 1968, but that the ruling party has been able to retain as much stability as it has.

President Echeverría rode the stormy waves of Mexican political life the past few years by appropriating as his own the symbols of radicalism, loudly proclaiming his devotion to the third world and his advocacy of a basic redistribution of the world's wealth between the haves and the have-nots.

Useful as this political rhetoric may have been to him, its negative result was to scare off potential foreign investors as well as to frighten Mexican entrepreneurs. Yet large-scale and rapidly increasing capital investment is badly needed if Mexico is to have the jobs, the housing, the public utilities and the other essentials required to give its growing population even a minimally satisfactory standard of living.

The challenge facing Mr. López Portillo when he takes over the presidency is to exhibit the political skill essential to contain the nation's internal tensions, while making possible the more rapid economic development required to meet the Mexican people's material needs.

...Loses a Free Press

President Echeverría's term has only a few more months to go; but his Government has just taken a fateful step whose consequences could be felt long after he is out of office. That step is the silencing of the most important independent journalistic voice of Mexico, the newspaper Excelsior. The paper itself continues to appear, but all that made it fresh, interesting and valuable in a democratic society has vanished to be replaced by conformist attitudes that would never have had a chance in the previous, genuine Excelsior.

The manner in which this journalistic coup d'état was carried out is particularly disturbing. For months a propaganda campaign was directed against Excelsior. Government-tolerated—and almost certainly Government-encouraged—squatters were permitted to seize a large and valuable tract of land the newspaper owned. Then, almost immediately after the presidential election, a well-financed rebellion was organized within the paper's staff to create a situation in which the editors risked armed conflict if they sought to carry out their normal duties.

The editors bowed to the threat of force and quit their employment. The bully boys of Lenin in 1917 or of Hitler in 1933 could not have done a more efficient job of enslaving a once proud and free newspaper. But this act of totalitarian suppression discredits those who now boast of Mexico's stability and democracy; while it presents a moral challenge of the first magnitude to President Echeverría's elected successor.

Olympics Betrayal

The cynical calculation of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau that the International Olympic Committee was a paper tiger has proved correct. On the ground it had "no other alternative," the executive board of the committee has bowed to Canada's decision to bar the Republic of China team that comes from Taiwan.

It would be unfair to the other athletes and to the City of Montreal to withdraw Olympic sanction from the games at this late date, the president of the committee lamely argued in justifying his surrender. Once again principle is abandoned in favor of expediency just as the Canadian Government no doubt thought would happen when it decided to curry favor with Peking by striking at the Taiwanese athletes who up to that moment had been duly recognized competitors in the Olympic Games.

If Canada gets away with this flagrant political abuse and misuse of the Olympics, a far-reaching precedent will have been set that could destroy the modern Olympic Games altogether. Four years from now, the summer Olympics are scheduled to be held in the Soviet Union. Moscow has now before it a precise model of the way to proceed to bar any country it dislikes or does not recognize from participating in the 1980 games.

President Ford yesterday urged American officials to seek a reversal of the I.O.C. executive board's decision to surrender. This is the very least that should be done; but if the I.O.C. persists in accepting the Canadian fait accompli, United States participation in the Olympics should be reconsidered even at this late date, on the ground that the games have now been totally corrupted by a politicization that reduces this international sports contest to a mockery of the Olympic ideal and to a mere sideshow in the ideological wars.

The Case Against Troy

Showing the same reluctance to face up to unpleasant decisions that has helped make the New York City Council a farce rather than a force in municipal affairs, the Council's Committee on Standards and Ethics has deferred action in the case of Councilman Matthew J. Troy, a self-confessed tax cheat.

The committee decided to await further facts, including court action on three Federal charges of income tax fraud, before deciding even the narrow question of whether Mr. Troy should be removed from his key position as chairman of the Council's Finance Committee.

But Mr. Troy already has pleaded guilty to one of the Federal counts, namely that he filed a false income tax return in 1972 that did not report $37,000 he had taken from the estates of law clients.

The Councilman had previously signed a statement saying that during the three years covered by the criminal charges "I received substantial gross receipts from various estates which I handled as attorney. These gross receipts represented moneys which I withdrew from the estates without any authorization. I knew this was unlawful. I utilized these moneys either to support my family and law practice or to repay estates from which I have previously withdrawn such moneys. . . . I did not report these moneys because I wanted to conceal my unlawful activities in withdrawing these estate moneys."

The case against Matthew Troy, in his own words, already is more than sufficient to demonstrate beyond any reasonable doubt his unfitness to continue as Finance Chairman—or even to retain his Council seat. By failing to act promptly in the Troy case, the Committee on Ethics and Standards raises serious doubts about the ethics and standards of the City Council itself.

Carter on Foreign Policy: 2 'Weaknesses' Of Oil and Power

To the Editor:

Two weaknesses stand out in Governor Carter's otherwise balanced address to the Foreign Policy Association and responses to subsequent questions.

Mr. Carter gave undue emphasis to the partnership between North America, Western Europe and Japan in the world's total structure. The stamp of the Trilateral Commission is to overcome the impress of the pentagon of power, though Soviet-American and Sino-American relations will continue to be important for the parties and the world scene. But the Carter address emphasized the importance of the industrial democracies for world order at the expense of north-south dealings.

The present Administration has given a high priority to north-south relations after its earlier preoccupations with Russia and China and its experiences with the third world in the wake of the O.P.E.C. challenge. The high priority should carry over into the next Administration, whether Republican or Democratic. If the altered nature of world politics is to be faced by our Government, Carter spoke of widening the opportunities for north-south consultations, assisting those countries that are in direct need and joining with others to support specialized lending agencies. But the country deserves to hear his views on the UNCTAD negotiations, the World Food Council and related matters.

Another problem is Mr. Carter's inconsistent approach to arms transfers. As part of his laudable concern with the United States' role as the leading arms supplier in the world, he questioned the likely export of advanced weapons to Kenya and Zaïre as a cynical act of rationing arms in the guise of efforts to limit violence and as an incentive for an East-West arms race in Africa. Yet in his later responses to questions, Mr. Carter supported the strengthening of the United States' commitment to supply Israel with whatever defense aid is necessary to permit it to meet any attack.

If Governor Carter is a consistent, principled critic of United States arms transfers, he should apply his reservations about transfers to all actual or potential recipients of this country. As one of the most independent Presidential candidates to appear in many years, Mr. Carter has an opportunity to pursue his ideas about the United States' part in starting or perpetuating regional conflicts by the sale or gift of military hardware. PAUL F. POWER
Cincinnati, July 9, 1976

To the Editor:

Your June 21 editorial on the mark in the divestiture debate by emphasizing price and underestimating influence over our destiny by disproportionate control of products which are the economic lifeblood of our body politic.

Dividing the largest oil company into separate spheres of activity is the only way to limit economic/political power in the hands of a few petro-giants whose wealth would be nicely served if our government became their wholly owned subsidiary. Economic/political imbalances are needed to despoil multimillion-dollar prizes aimed at persuading that what's good for Exxon is for America, that ain't necessarily so. To hope for containment through remedial reinforcement antitrust laws is about as realistic as taking kindly smokers to such as "free market."

The ebb and flow of marketplace forces simply create a situation in which a finite resource is dominated by a corporation that controls 70 percent of the production and has no serious alternative for competition at home.

I state these views with strong conviction because, as a business executive, I confess "divided loyalty." I love my country, but on a day-to-day basis I hold a "higher" loyalty to business enterprise that provides economic sustenance. Any man who says otherwise is just deception or self-deception. I, a decision-maker in an energy enterprise, I would not allow my own geothermal division to underinvest in unit (which is why only hot divestiture will assure genuine fuel competition), and I would insist that the public interest benefit if my company were paid to be as large, powerful and free of tax burdens as possible.

My professional patriotism prompts me to do all this by minimizing risks and maximizing returns things businessmen are apt to do.

What Congress is supposed to do to limit the economic/political power of what Forbes magazine recently described as "organizations only directly responsible to the pet divestiture is a small first step in the direction."
HAROLD W. CHAIRMAN, Factory Equipment

Vice-Presidential Job

To the Editor:

Democratic Presidential candidate Jimmy Carter is to be commended for the manner in which he is currently "interviewing" prospective Vice-Presidential candidates. This process, which necessarily entails public announcement of the names of those being considered, allows generous amounts of time for public digestion of possible running mates, thus making highly improbable a repeat of the Eagleton or Agnew fiascoes. [Editorials July 9 and today.]

The fact that Governor Carter is obviously seeking a running mate from the Washington establishment and one with foreign affairs experience and expertise should also be of comfort to the nations of the world and to those in this country who recognize Mr. Carter's lack of experience and standing in this area.

Senator Muskie's comments after his July 3 "interview" with Governor Carter are especially noteworthy. His hopes that Governor Carter will assign his Vice President responsible and worthwhile tasks are generally regarded as a cliché in American political history. However, Mr. Carter now has an excellent opportunity to make the Vice Presidency worth more than the proverbial "bucket of warm spit." This can be accomplished by selecting Senator Muskie or Senator Church, both with considerable foreign affairs experience, as his Vice-Presidential running mate and then, after taking office, appointing his Vice President as Secretary of State. There could certainly be no more responsible or relevant position in our Federal Government for a Vice President.

To have a Vice President of the United States who is also Secretary of State would insure that our top two elected officials are working as a team and that, should the all-too-common "unthinkable" occur, the succession to the Presidency would be made considerably easier.

WILLIAM J. GILMARTIN
Alexandria, Va., July 7, 1976

Jefferson Appended

To the Editor:

Professor Areskou argues in his July 6 letter that when morality costs, it should be curtailed.

Because "the Watergate affair clearly weakened the ability of the executive branch to conduct foreign policy" and cost the country "a substantial decline in foreign prestige" we should not demand "a reduction in official lawlessness and immorality."

We should, presumably, have ignored its dishonesty and hypocrisy, and swept it all under the rug of expediency.

Congress should abandon its "puritan anti-bribery drive against American business abroad." We should not waste our efforts in "cleaning up our foreign intelligence system," says the professor.

Perhaps the words of Thomas Jefferson, "The whole art of government consists in the art of being honest," should be supplemented with: "unless it costs us something."
KENASTON TWITCHELL
Princeton, N. J., July 6, 1976

The 'Finest' in Action

To the Editor:

At about 8:30 P.M. on June 2, my wife and I were on our way to a family reunion at 75 Henry Street in Brooklyn. Not having been back to New York for some thirty years, we were lost driving our car under the Brooklyn Bridge.

Finally we stopped a patrol car. The young officer said, "Oh, you're really lost." I replied in a concerned tone, "Yes, we are, officer." "Well, instead of me telling you how to go, you will only get lost again, so why don't you follow my car and I'll take you there."

He did! And now we know why New York's police are called the "finest."
E. A. SINDLE

Toward Insured Bonds

To the Editor:

Investors today are increasingly reluctant to purchase municipal bonds because of the general mistrust of the financial condition of local and state governments. To render such obligations more palatable, unprecedented high interest rates are offered, thus placing an additional financial burden for many years to come on already hard-pressed governments.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was set up years ago and accomplished its purpose of bolstering public confidence in our banking system. Such a Federal instrumentality might be an answer to the high cost of borrowing by our cities and states. Rigid standards for acceptance of a proposed issue could be prescribed, and the borrowing entity assessed a minute percentage of the amount to be raised. Assessments would be deposited in the Federal agency's reserve fund to take care of infrequent defaults in principal or interest by any of the insured issues.

Confidence in the safety of their investments would encourage the purchase of municipal obligations by the individual investor and thereby enable governments to borrow needed funds at lower interest rates.

MILTON A. GOTTLIEB
Jersey City, July 2, 1976

To Protect the Labor

To the Editor:

Action by the Internal Revenue Service against the Teamsters pension funds in withdrawing exempt status and in making employees liable for payment of tax contributions made on their behalf the employers can only result in and injury to innocent persons firing backshot at alleged union officials and hitting the bystander, the laborer.

I would believe that the time come for the Government to halt to the practice which crisscrosses national fields for union officials permitting them to control and with vast sums of money, adequate supervision and participation by the ultimate beneficiary, the union member.

The antitrust division of the Department should intervene by appropriate legal action to break up monopolistic control by a few officials of the dual function of running a union shop with the duties of tending the needs and interests of its membership and at the same time handling the funds received, which are actually funds to be administered for benefit of its union members.

Committees should be set up separate boards within the union under authority of the Government providing for representation of elected union members drawn from union officials and workers, representation by the Federal state governments as well as by outside financial adviser.

The Justice Department should further in breaking up the monopolistic structure of single-union control every phase of labor such as occurred in Alaska.

In these days of financial chaos by the union worker for himself, family, the concept of greater protection and establishment of safeguards for the members of unions can be overlooked by the Government. [Editorial July 6.] DAVID J. ROSEN
Newark, July 1, 1976

Breakfast Bottleneck

To the Editor:

The July 7 news article "Breakfast Time at the Regency" plains why the limousines in front of the hotel are allowed to double-triple park there—at least by regulation.

I have always wondered when dining or taxiing down Park Avenue, why such a bottleneck was allowed in the traffic every working week.

Freedom as a Foreign-Policy Base

WASHINGTON — There are two kinds of political harmony.

One is tactical harmony. When a good candidate in a primary locks up a key nomination, all hands clamber aboard the bandwagon, the press proclaims "harmony," and the general election campaign begins.

There is another kind of harmony, harder to come by, but in the long run of much greater value to the candidate, to the party and to the nation: substantive harmony—the mellow sound when members of the same party, while not necessarily agreeing on every note, are at least playing the same piece of music.

The main issues that have caused discord in the Democratic Party over the last decade have been in the realm of foreign and defense policy.

Is there a chance now that Democrats have achieved, or can achieve, substantive harmony on those issues? That Democrats can now say "maybe" on foreign policy harmony seems to me to be related to the slow emergence, or re-emergence, of a powerful theme in American foreign policy: the defense of freedom.

Behind closed doors, subcommittee members and candidate representatives sat around a table for three days and parts of those nights. Pat Moynihan was at the table and so was Sam Brown, the young antiwar activist who is Treasurer of Colorado. Representative Yvonne Burke, a California liberal, was there. So were Representative Walter Flowers, of Watergate fame, a Wallace delegate from Alabama, and Bob Hargesty, former L.B.J. speechwriter and a Carter delegate from Texas. Former Senate candidate Joseph Duffy of Connecticut was there, representing Carter. I was there as Senator Henry Jackson's representative.

It was assumed, at least by me, that

A Quiet Reconciliation

By Betty Garrett

COLUMBUS, Ohio — At 2 P.M. July 4, 1976, 200 years after the Declaration of Independence was signed, the bell at St. Michael's Church here tolled to commemorate, I cried, turning my face away from other people's availed eyes. It was like making love after a long estrangement.

That private moment vanished as a couple crouched over a tape recorder, preserving it electronically while a car whizzed past with someone shaking a hand hell out of the window.

I laughed, realizing that those juxtaposed images said as much about what's happened since 1776 as the bells did.

The ambivalence in Americans' pursuit of life, liberty and happiness seems particularly intense in the Midwest. We want things portable but permanent, independent and secure, rooted but mobile. We can't have it both ways, but persist in trying.

The reasons amount to psychology, hardly a popular preoccupation. This region is dominated by the Puritan work ethic, "achieving" and enjoying the fruits of same. History is usually dealt with on a "small" level: it is recalling the good old days on Aunt Mayme's farm in 1921, or comparing hairlines, families and jobs at a reunion of the Central High School Class of 1953. Midwesterners wax nostalgic in terms of traditions and "traditional values," not epochs, eras and empires. History with a capital H, pursued by scholars or buffs, probably happened to other people in other places—distant in time and relevance.

Being insatiably interested in history, though, I just typed out commercialism and devoured the news media's crash course in Americana while others groaned that they "never want to hear the word Bicentennial" again.

I am somewhat representative of up to one-third of the population of major cities here. My background was Appalachian before it was Midwestern. But when I was a child in the 40's, people in Greenup, Ky., and New Boston, Ohio, were too busy just surviving to preserve or communicate the history of our English and Scots-Irish forebears.

After World War II we joined an Appalachian exodus northward seeking

Making a Bed of Thorns

By Russell Baker

Jimmy Carter has gone about the Vice-presidential business the wrong way so far. First of all, there was that idea for calling several of the more elegant Democratic Senators to sit for job interviews. It made splashy headlines during an otherwise dull period in the news from Georgia. Too splashy.

Now that everybody knows who was interviewed, everybody is also going to know who was found wanting, as soon as Carter announces the winner. He makes one man happy and one man unhappy, and the others are left having their deficiencies advertised.

This would spell political trouble even if the rejects were third-rate, which Carter's applicants decidedly are not. They are mostly United States Senators, a class of humanity in which pride marches hand-in-hand with arrogance. Presidents humble them at their peril, and when they are Senators as glossy and influential as those on Carter's job list, Presidents labor to avoid letting the air out of their dignity.

Having to appear publicly for the Vice Presidency is embarrassing to a Senator. Senators are supposed to be too august to be interested in such nonsense, and though many confess to the office secretly, it is considered fairly degrading for one to confess when they are forced to go publicly, hand-in-hand, to be interviewed for the job. They can be sure that their colleagues will not soon forget it, although the smiles will be seen only when their backs have turned.

So Carter now faces the danger that several of the Senate's most astute and influential men will mark down their public rejections as scores to be settled at leisure if he arrives in Washington. A small matter to be sure in a short campaign, but Presidents after wars have four years to suffer with the Senate.

When President Kennedy's program was being dismantled in Congress in 1961, I asked Senator Albert Gore of Tennessee, who had publicly confessed to Vice-presidential ambition and had been rejected, why the President was having such difficulty at the Capitol.

"You know," he said, "he kept that lot of us up here still sitting there, Jack, as a young Senator who was in the back row."

With Senators Humphrey and Kennedy already among Senators, decidedly cool, Carter doesn't need Muskie, Glenn, Mondale, Jackson and Church nursing memories that he lost them at last of dignity.

He could stiffen his danger by announcing that having interviewed the lot, he is prepared to certify all of them well-fitted for the Vice Presidency, and leave it to the convention to take its choice. This would show a properly respectful care for this wretchedly abused office and, at the same time, give the party an inspiring chance to "soak" in democratic process.

The wisdom of politics, of course, has it that candidates in Carter's position can only be hurt by a Vice-presidential candidate, whoever it be. Like Eisenhower in the 1950's, Johnson in 1964 and Nixon in 1972, Carter is so far ahead in the polls that adding another name to the ticket can only dilute his strength.

In the polls, in fact, Carter was elected President four weeks ago.

easily overwhelming both Ford and Regan, and without any Vice-presidential assistance at all. It was the earliest election of a nonincumbent since President Dewey was elected in the spring of 1948. Not until he took Earl Warren for Vice President was President Dewey defeated.

Mr. Carter's success in this year of the outsiders seems to rest on his refusal to traffic with either Washington or the Democratic Party. Yet, in taking on the Vice-presidential question, he has involved himself in both.

It cannot do much for his polls to appear in public now as a man who, in his first big decision, restricts his choices to old-line Democratic regulars, based in Washington. This raises the question whether Carter is truly the new political man he appeared to be in the primaries.

A genuinely new political man would surely have washed his hands of the Vice Presidency weeks ago, and perhaps not even have bothered to show up for the convention. The convention could then have been left to nominate its own choice for the Vice Presidency, leaving Carter politically untroubled by his enemies.

If the choice had been peculiarly protean, he could easily have regulated the convention's Vice-presidential candidate (pointing out that he showed how dreadful the old political parties had become) and urged everybody to vote for Carter as a man too sensible to have anything to do with them.

Under these conditions, a Vice-presidential candidate might even have strengthened Carter's ticket by giving him opportunity to illustrate his famous penchant for honesty by campaigning on the slogan: "If elected, I shall ignore the Vice President."

Political Satirists Descend On Convention City Clubs; View Leaders With Alarm

Mark Russell: "The convention is the full before the full."

Murt Sahl on Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California: "He took a vow of silence—on the major issues."

David Frye: "I'm going to do impressions of everybody in show business—from Jimmy Cagney to Jimmy Carter"

By MEL GUSSOW

Just in time to counter the Democratic National Convention, political satirists have descended on New York. While the delegates convene at Madison Square Garden, comedians are practicing their craft in their own arenas—clubs and cabarets all over town.

The impressionist David Frye is savaging politicians at Dangerfield's. Mort Sahl is sharpening old lances at the Bird Cage at Michael's Pub. Washington's favorite comic, Mark Russell, is on the attack at the Rainbow Grill. And at the Bottom Line, an improvisational company called the Convention is trying to revive the insouciant spirit of the Second City.

In common, they are spoofing candidates, platforms, conventioners and Presidential hopefuls named Ford, Reagan and Carter, all three of whom seem to present more of an obstacle to satirization than, for example, the Nixon, Rockefeller and Humphrey of yesterday. The jokes fly freely; the assault is wholesale. In an open season, all politicians are disabused.

The Most Malicious

In the spotlight at Dangerfield's Mr. Frye—who must be the most maliciously taunting of the current political comedians—announces, "I'm going to do impressions of everybody in show business—from Jimmy Cagney to Jimmy Carter." Then he becomes a man possessed. His Marlon Brando mouth seemingly filled with cotton as in "The Godfather," reminds Richard Nixon, "I said."

When one visitor asked Tom Kimbrough, a ranger, how to get into the campground, he replied, only half-humorously, "Some people go through at 6 A.M. shaking each tent, but we frown on that."

Visitors Understand Even so, tourists are remarkably understanding. Boyd Evison, superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in Tennessee, the country's most heavily used park, said he got only six letters protesting the removal of paper towels and the near-elimination of electricity from campground restrooms.

But park officials worry about the deteriorating quality of the environment in parks. Crater Lake in Oregon had to be closed for three weeks a year ago when raw sewage overflowed from a plugged sewer line into the main water supply. Several million dollars' worth of new facilities had to be installed. Theo the park was granted only a quarter of its usual yearly funds for this summer's season.

Roger Contor of Rocky Mountain National Park, one of the most outspoken superintendents, declared flatly that "both the quality and quantity of visitor services and resource management have suffered" from the reduction of the park staff in the last five years by 7 percent.

At Grand Canyon, where the staff size has been frozen while the number of visitors has increased 24 percent so far this year, vandalism and theft have become major problems. An observer recently watched several young shoplifters stuff their shirts with food in a Canyon grocery store.

In the Everglades in Florida, budget cuts have led to situations that threaten the fragile ecology of the area. "We can't pump out the toilets as often as we should," said Jerry Hammond, the chief ranger. "We don't have enough people to explain the ecological system and to say, 'Don't take too many fish and don't cut the trees.'"

While park professionals and environmental purists fret, the average tourist still sees the national parks as a welcome outdoor refuge from ordinary city or suburban daily life.

Old park hands do notice unwelcome changes, though. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Crawford of Cape Coral, Fla., spent nearly a whole day recently trying to find an empty spot for their massive G.M.C. "Glacier" motor home between Yellowstone and Grand Teton Parks.

"Yesterday we couldn't find anything so we went to the cabin, plugged the motor home into it and slept in the motor home," Mrs. Crawford said.

"Twenty years ago," added Mr. Crawford, "there were no problems out here except with the bears. Now the bears are all gone. Apparently there's no room for them, either."

The use of trains to transport visitors at Yosemite National Park in California helps alleviate traffic congestion.

Democratic Convention

Strong attacks were made on the Republicans at the opening of the 37th Democratic National Convention at Madison Square Garden. Robert S. Strauss, the party's national chairman, called for an end to "eight years of Nixon-Ford, eight long years of Kissinger, Simon, Morton and Butz." The keynote speeches were delivered by Senator John Glenn of Ohio and Representative Barbara Jordan of Texas. [Page 1, Column 8.] Jimmy Carter completed his interviews with possible Vice-Presidential running mates. He said he might reach a decision tonight. Mr. Carter gave no sign of his preference, but it seemed that Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota and Senator Edmund S. Muskie were at the top of the list, followed by Senator John Glenn of Ohio. However, political sources said that Mr. Glenn's prospects might be fading. [1:5-7.]

A negotiating team of leading Democratic feminists won commitments from Jimmy Carter concerning the future role of women in the Democratic Party and in a Carter administration that they said were acceptable. A caucus of all the women delegates to the convention was scheduled for this morning, when a decision will be made on whether to accept the commitments. [1:5-7.]

International

The United States chief delegate to the United Nations, William W. Scranton, praised Israel's rescue of hostages from Palestinian hijackers in Uganda at a meeting of the Security Council. He said the rescue was a "combination of guts and brains that has seldom if ever been surpassed." But he conceded that the Israeli raid "involved a temporary breach of the territorial integrity of Uganda." [1:1.]

Israeli sources gave further details of the rescue of the hostages at the Entebbe airport a week ago. The Israeli units brought with them a Mercedes limousine carrying an Israeli officer in blackened face impersonating President Idi Amin of Uganda and two Land-Rovers full of men dressed as Palestinian bodyguards. The rescue confused the Ugandan soldiers at the airport and gave the rescue party a few more precious seconds in which to reach the hostages. [1:2-3.]

The United States has sent a warship and a Navy patrol plane to Kenya in a symbolic show of support for the East African country in its dispute with neighboring Uganda. A Pentagon spokesman said that the frigate Beary arrived at the Kenya port of Mombasa. A Navy P-3 Orion, an anti-submarine warfare plane, landed Saturday at the Nairobi airport, where it is expected to stay a few days. [1:3.]

Newly unified Vietnam took a major step to improve relations with its Southeast Asian neighbors by agreeing to establish diplomatic ties with the Philippines and to receive a delegation from Thailand next month for discussion of relations. Until a month ago Hanoi—now capital of north and south—had assailed the Philippines, Thailand and other members of the Association of Asian Nations for being part of a "neocolonialist" organization controlled by the United States. [1:4.]

National

The Agriculture Department said that the nation's largest corn crop would be harvested this year and that there would be a bumper wheat crop. The department forecast a total yield of 6.55 billion bushels of corn, up 14 percent from last year's record 5.77 billion bushels. The total winter and spring wheat crop is expected to be 2.04 billion bushels, 4 percent below last year. [1:2-3.]

Baseball's owners and players reached agreement on a four-year pact that for the first time gives the players freedom of movement from one team to another. The agreement replaces the so-called reserve system, which traditionally has restricted a player to one club until that club traded, sold or released him. The 24 club owners and the 600 players must ratify the agreement. [1:1.]

Metropolitan

New York City's precipitous population losses over the last few years may be coming to an end, according to new figures of the Census Bureau. Manhattan is gaining new people and the departure from the Bronx and Brooklyn is now only a trickle. Fred Cavanaugh of the bureau's population division said, "The decrease has tapered off significantly—we were very surprised." However, he cautioned that the new figures were still provisional and subject to some later correction. [1:4.]

Cyclist, 61, Killed While on a Trip Around the World

BATAVIA, N.Y., July 12 (UPI)—William Marquardt set off two months ago on an around-the-world bicycle trip to show people a gentler form of travel than the automobile. Sunday night, his bike was hit by a car and he died instantly.

Mr. Marquardt was a 61-year-old retired linguistics professor who once replied to a questioner, "Eccentric? Of course I am. No question about it. Eccentric means out of center, doing something the vast majority would not do."

He was a memorable sight riding down a road on his 10-speed, always wearing a ragged old hat and a radio strapped around his head, with a dental mirror for a rear-view mirror.

Mr. Marquardt was riding his bicycle on Route 5 near Batavia when a car hit him from behind about 10:45 P.M. Sunday. The accident was investigated, but no charges were filed against the driver, Dennis McEwen, 25.

The cyclist was nearly 3,000 miles into his dream of going around the world, retracing the route used in the late 1880's by Thomas Stevens. Mr. Marquardt left his home in Wichita, Kan., on April 24 to go to San Francisco, where he began his journey on May 11. He was to return home Oct. 24, 1977.

Mr. Marquardt was headed for Boston when he was hit. He then planned to take a plane or ship to Liverpool, England, and cycle through Europe and Asia to Tokyo, where he planned to catch a ship back to California.

He is survived by his wife, Patricia, a son William Jr. and a daughter, Mary, all of Wichita.

Lewis Deschler, 71, Dies; Ex-House Parliamentarian

WASHINGTON, July 12 (AP) — Lewis Deschler, retired parliamentarian who powerfully influenced the House of Representatives for 46 years, died today at Bethesda Naval Hospital after a series of strokes. He was 71 years old and resided in Bethesda, Md.

Mr. Deschler is survived by his wife, the former Virginia A. Cole; a son, Lewis Deschler 2d; a daughter, Mrs. William B. Eddy, and two grandchildren.

Low-Key Style

Sitting within whispering distance of a succession of Speakers of the House, Lewis Deschler derived his power from the ability to cite the thousands of precedents and intricate rules that govern that body. To the public, he was as invisible as a man of 6 feet 2 inches could be, and preferred it that way.

His passion for anonymity was legendary. Yet, when he retired two years ago on the advice of his physician, he left office laden with honors as the most influential and highest-paid member of the House, which paid him a Representative's salary of $42,500 a year.

Mr. Deschler's name reached the public print now and then, and when it did the occasion usually was of historic moment. Thus, his advice on procedures and precedents played a part in Speaker Carl Albert's decision in September 1973 against starting a House inquiry into the conduct of then Vice President Spiro T. Agnew.

Aided Statehood Bills

Mr. Deschler also rendered an opinion that permitted the Alaska and Hawaii statehood bills to be steered past the Rules Committee where they were stalled. And it was he who worked out the exact date—April 7, 1959—for the House to start a House inquiry into the conduct of then Vice President Spiro T. Agnew.

And it was he who worked out the exact date—April 7, 1959—for the House to start a House inquiry into the conduct of then Vice President Spiro T. Agnew.

Volume of precedents the House parliamentarian and his staff are supposed to keep track of is staggering. There are more than 20,000 of them, uncodified since 1936, and they are the guiding interpretations of the House and Senate versions of the repeal.

Dr. Brooks F. Ellis is Dead at 78; Headed N.Y.U. Geology Faculty

Dr. Brooks F. Ellis, a professor of geology, who led extensive research into the petroleum resources of Long Island Sound, died Sunday at his home in St. Mary's, Va. He was 73 years old.

Dr. Ellis, who retired in 1966 as chairman of New York University's geology department, was a specialist in foraminifera, small one-celled sea animals with shells full of tiny holes. The shells form the main component of chalk and many deep-sea sediments.

This specialty led to his involvement in research of value to the petroleum industry. In 1956 Dr. Ellis was put in charge of a four-year seagoing research project, undertaken jointly by N.Y.U. and the American Museum of Natural History and sponsored by Abercrombie & Fitch.

For four years the 105-foot former yacht Sea Echo served as a floating laboratory for study of the sedimentation in Long Island Sound. One of the questions studied was how sediment changes into oil.

Also in 1956, Dr. Ellis established a board of advisers of N.Y.U.'s geology department. Thirteen petroleum industry executives and scientists were named to the board, charged with tackling the problem of growing manpower shortages in petroleum geology.

The professor was a graduate of Marietta College and earned his Ph.D. at Princeton. Before starting a 36-year association with N.Y.U. in 1930, he had taught science and geology in high schools in West Virginia and in New York.

Dr. Ellis lives his wife, the former Alice Gilman. A funeral service will be held at the Ellis home in St. Mary's, Va., at 1 P.M. tomorrow.

Raymond W. Lapham, 73; Ex-Head of Boston Garden

SCARBOROUGH, Me., July 12 — Raymond W. Lapham, sportsman, philanthropist, and former president of the Boston Garden Sports Center, died in his home at Prout's Neck yesterday after a long illness. He was 73 years old.

Mr. Lapham was born in Boston and was graduated in 1928 from Yale University. The field house at Yale is named for his father, who gave the funds for its construction.

Mr. Lapham was instrumental in starting, and later supporting, Camp Lapham for Girls at Winchendon, Mass. He also was active with the Boys Club of Boston. He served in the Army as a captain in World War II.

His survivors include his wife, Mrs. Madge Jarrett Lapham; a son, Henry G. 2d of Manchester, Mass.; two daughters, Mrs. Stephen Mead of Winchendon and Mrs. James I. Kilroy Jr. of Newfield, Mass.; and a sister, Mrs. M. J. Lapham.

A funeral service will be held Wednesday at St. James Episcopal Church, Prout's Neck.

Mr. Deschler entered the House in 1927. He began the vast job of renewed codification, aided by a staff that included his daughter Joan Mari, Mrs. Eddy. As a consultant, he continued that work of updating after his retirement until his recent illness.

"The Greatest" To the late Speaker Sam Rayburn, Mr. Deschler was "the big brain man" and the only great parliamentarian around. Speaker Albert even called him the greatest parliamentarian in the world.

At the same time, there were members who considered him too conservative. Others voiced resentment in 1972 when he proposed a mass transit amendment to a highway bill at the bidding of the Speaker, and Ralph Nader once described him as "the hidden despot in the House."

One of the few anecdotes told about Mr. Deschler in Washington recalls a day in 1932 when a man with a gun appeared in the House gallery, demanding to speak.

As the members scrambled for safety, the Representative who happened to be in the Speaker's chair at the time sought to join the stampede. At that point Mr. Deschler restrained him, yelling, "You can't leave—you're presiding!"

Football Player

He was born on March 3, 1905, in Chillicothe, Ohio. He played varsity football at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, which he attended through his junior year. Planning to enter the foreign service, he then transferred to George Washington University.

That same year, 1925, he got a timekeeper's job at the Speaker's desk in the House of Representatives. The work, he once said in a rare interview, left him with enough time on his hands during speeches to pick up parliamentary manuals and read books for reading.

The young man's reading habits impressed Speaker Nicholas Longworth, who offered him the position of assistant parliamentarian in 1927. He was appointed parliamentarian a year later.

At the same time, Mr. Deschler formally studied law, and earned his law degree at National University in 1932.

Another of her efforts resulted in the showing of "Dance in America," which was underwritten by the National Endowment for the Arts, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and the Exxon Corporation.

Miss Meck was also active in obtaining support for WNET's Television Laboratory, a center for experimental video projects.

There are no immediate survivors. Plans for a memorial service, to be held at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, are to be announced.

Dr. Joseph Horan, Expert In Medical Insurance, 85

Dr. Joseph C. Horan, who retired 15 years ago as medical director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, died yesterday morning in New York Hospital after an illness of several months. He lived at 563 Park Avenue and was 85 years old.

Dr. Horan, who had been with the Metropolitan for 42 years, was considered an authority in health insurance. After his retirement he served as a consultant to a number of insurance companies.

He was born in Denver and graduated from Harvard Medical School in 1911. After serving his internship and residency in Bellevue Hospital in New York City he served as a physician in the armed forces during World War I.

Survivors include his wife, the former Eleanor Sinclair; a son, John J., of Princeton, N. J.; and three grandchildren.

JOAN MACK DEAD; AIDED CHANNEL 13

Fund Raiser, 46, Gathered 'Adams Chronicles' Dinners

Joan Mack, principal fund raiser for WNET/Channel 13's public television production, died of cancer on Sunday at her home in East Hampton, L.I. She was 46 years old.

Miss Meck, a graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and of Fordham University, started in broadcasting in the 1950's. She was with ABC, then with Omnia and later with the Metropolitan Educational Television Association, the forerunner of Channel 13.

She joined National Educational Television in 1961 and served in program underwriting positions. In 1971 she was named director of development.

After the merger of N.E.T. with the local New York public television station WNDT and the formation of WNET/13, Miss Mack headed the station's program underwriting department.

She was instrumental in obtaining financial support for public television productions from corporations, foundations and government agencies.

One of her achievements was to bring together a coalition of contributors—the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Atlantic Richfield Company and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation—to support the production of the 13-part "Adams Chronicles," public television's principal Bicentennial observation.

Another of her efforts resulted in the showing of "Dance in America," which was underwritten by the National Endowment for the Arts, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and the Exxon Corporation.

Miss Meck was also active in obtaining support for WNET's Television Laboratory, a center for experimental video projects.

There are no immediate survivors. Plans for a memorial service, to be held at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, are to be announced.

Guards and One Inmate Hurt Mare-Up Over Routine Cell Search

July 12 (AP)—A riot broke out in the cell block at the State Prison in Albany today when four guards tried to remove an inmate, Albert McQueen, from his cell in Cellblock D. Mr. Quick refused to say what had triggered the trouble, but Mr. McQueen had been taken to a hospital with three wounds. State Corrections Commissioner, said Mr. McQueen had resisted a routine search of his cell. Four guards were injured in the ensuing melee. Mr. Quick said the second outbreak had occurred 45 minutes later when guards tried to clear 139 inmates from the Cellblock D exercise yard at the normal 10 P.M. closing time.

As the prisoners began entering the cellblock, Mr. Quick said, some of them attacked and injured four more guards. Off-duty guards were called to the prison, including some trained in quelling disturbances. Mr. Quick said all the inmates finally were back in their cells at 1:43 A.M. "There was no force at all used in getting inmates to their cells," Mr. Quick said at a news conference at the prison. He said inmates in the Cellblock A exercise yard had filed back to their cells without resistance.

State Corrections Commissioner, in Albany commenting on Attica prison disturbance.

State police officials and Sheriff Allen H. Capwell of Wyoming County, who were notified of the trouble, but no outside help was needed. Governor Carey stayed up all night at his New York City hotel suite, keeping in touch with the situation by telephone. James Vlasto, Mr. Carey's press secretary, said the Governor had been prepared to go to the prison if the situation had demanded it.

Mr. Quick said Mr. McQueen had suffered a broken jaw, cuts and bruises in the melee, had been treated by a doctor at the prison, and then had been placed in a cellblock for unruly inmates. A guard told reporters that a filing cabinet and knives had been used in the attack on the guards. Mr. Quick said a guard had been stabbed, but no knife had been found. Three guards were admitted to St. Joseph Hospital in Batavia, all in stable condition. "I don't consider this a major incident," Commissioner Ward said at his Albany news conference.

He described Mr. McQueen as "an assaultive inmate," and said he had had more than 375 disciplinary reports filed against him in the four years since his imprisonment. Mr. Quick said Attica now had 2,014 prisoners, which he said was close to the number imprisoned there in 1971 when overcrowding was cited as one of the causes of the rebellion. He said the state intended to reduce the number of Attica inmates, but had no definite plans at this time.

Statues on Grand Central Lighted

With the flick of a switch by Jacqueline Onassis, the heroic statue of the Greek god Mercury atop Grand Central Terminal was bathed in a beam of light last night for the first time since the terminal was built in 1913. And the flanking statues of Minerva and Hercules were accented by smaller floodlights. "It's a beautiful building, and I think a city that's proud of itself should accent its beauty and make its people proud," Mrs. Onassis said as she glanced up at the illuminated 44-foot statue 120 feet above the Park Avenue ramp outside the terminal's Beaux Arts south facade. Most of the $7,000 cost of the lighting was underwritten by the Philip Morris Company, Mr. Papert said.

Bassett, charged the Assemblyman with his position in Albany to get a half dozen of the rent strike case in Landlord Tenant also charged Mr. Baro with withholding operating Tevax's continued ownership of the Assemblyman said that he would continue to fight using for his constituents.

Injury Suit Ruling Reversed

State Supreme Court in Westchester County has reversed a $3 million claim for damages by Steven F. Gate University student who lost the use of legs because of a football injury. It ordered the case, which arose from a 1965 accident, lawyer had contended that the "head tackle" gate was unnecessarily dangerous. The court noted that there had been a sharp dispute over the plaintiff's lawyer and that the court had not replaced the juror as the plaintiff had also found that the trial justice erred in not material as evidence.

Construction Sites Shut Down

All of the construction sites in Westchester Counties were shut down by a strike by the Brotherhood of Teamsters. The affected sites were Texaco headquarters in Harrison, the Parkway in Yonkers and a major new sewage plant in New Rochelle. Teamsters Local 456 led against two contractors groups, Associated Builders and Contractors, and the Contractors Association, Putnam, Dutchess Counties. The union increased welfare and pension benefits in a contract. The previous contract expired June 30.

Workers Jersey Factory

The injured were taken to Bay Ridge Hospital in Holmdel, where all but five were released. A hospital spokesman said three were in serious condition and one person had died to the burn center at St. Agnes Hospital.

Juries Cut in Police Overtime

Harrison J. Goldin issued a report saying New York City Police Department could save $3.2 million a year overtime costs by expanding program freeing police officers of their duty if they are in court for arraignment proceedings. The report said that it found no the police had been abusing their overtime purpose of expanding pension benefits for officers.

Police Blotter:

A knife fight on the roof of 529 West 180th young man dead and his rival critically injured. The man was not immediately identified, whose name was withheld pending formal discovery at St. Luke's Hospital suffering wounds. A 23-year-old man was shot to Brooklyn street corner in what the police a continuation of a six-month-old neighborhood dead man, William Brooks, whose address was shot at the corner of Wyckoff Avenue Street. Duro Jankovic, 46, and his sons, and Paul, 19, all of 486 Harman Street, were arrested said the brothers had exchanged words with their father, who was injured during fracas in which Mr. Brooks was slain.

CIVIL SUIT FILED IN CURARE CASE

Patient's Husband Charges Hospital Was Negligent

The first civil suit growing out of the 13 unusual deaths at Riverdel Hospital in Yonkers, N.Y., a decade ago was filed yesterday against the hospital by the husband of a woman who died two days after giving birth.

The suit by Rene Shaw, who now lives in Big Pine Key, Fla., charged that Eileen Shaw's death on Oct. 23, 1966, was a result of an "assault and battery" upon her by an "agent or employee" of the proprietary hospital and that the hospital had been negligent in caring for Mrs. Shaw.

But the suit did not identify anyone in particular as having caused the woman's death. On May 18, a Bergen County grand jury indicted Dr. Mario E. Jascavlevich, the hospital's former chief surgeon, on charges of murdering five patients, not including Mrs. Shaw—at Riverdel in late 1965 and 1966. Dr. Jascavlevich pleaded not guilty and is free on bail.

Joseph C. Woodcock Jr., the Bergen County prosecutor, is expected to argue at the trial that the patients were murdered with lethal injections of curare, a muscle relaxant. A trial date has not been set.

Mrs. Shaw's death—originally ascribed to massive fat embolism—was one of 13 "unusual or unexplained" deaths that were investigated by the Bergen County Prosecutor's Office in 1966. That investigation was dropped after two weeks.

The case was reopened last January after an extensive inquiry into the deaths by The New York Times. Mrs. Shaw's body was not among the five exhumed by Mr. Woodcock last winter.

Although the investigation in 1966 by Guy W. Calissi, then the Bergen County Prosecutor, was touched off by the concerns of Riverdel's board of directors, Mr. Shaw asserted in his new complaint that the hospital had failed to investigate the deaths as they occurred over the period of a year and had "frankly and concealingly" the "unexplained" nature of the deaths.

A Heavy Fine Is Paid, $360 (All in Pennies)

ROCHESTER, July 12 (AP)—An irate landlord, fined $360 for his failure to correct property violations within the time limit of a court-ordered injunction in Rochester's City Hall. Jack Snare, the landlord, went to four banks and got the pennies in seven bags weighing 50 pounds each. It took him 45 minutes to break open the rolls of coins on the office floor of Louis N. Kash, Rochester's Corporation Counsel. "I just felt I was showing my resentment for the decision," Mr. Snare said.

Symbol of Constancy in Changing City

Stock markets have soared and crashed, mayors and Wall Street magnates have come and gone, trolley cars have vanished and a forest of great skyscrapers has risen all around. But for more than a half century, Genevieve Lettiere's little green newsstand has held its ground at Trinity Place and Rector Street, a sturdy fixture tucked between the ever-changing towers of lower Manhattan.

Mrs. Lettiere, a tiny widow with well-groomed, iron-gray hair and watchful eyes, will soon be marking two milestones—her 70th birthday next Monday, and the 55th anniversary of her newsstand on Sept. 15.

The dates will pass unnoticed in a city preoccupied with Bicentennial celebrations and the Democratic National Convention. And even the stand's regular customers—a daily parade of familiar but nameless faces to Mrs.

Lettiere—will probably know nothing about the occasions. But Mrs. Lettiere says she will not mind. "This is what I've done all my life," she said the other day. "The downtown people are wonderful. My customers are a very nice in all my years here. "Sometimes, I think I'm getting too old for the stand—when a day seems just too much. "But so far, my health is good and I'd certainly rather keep busy. Why should I stay home and look at the wall and go nuts?"

Home for Mrs. Lettiere is on Staten Island, and she regards her trips to and from work aboard the Staten Island Ferry as some of the most precious moments of her workdays, which begin at 10 A.M. and end with the last stragglers of the evening rush at 6:30 P.M.

From her vintage cubicle, layered with many coats of paint and stacked high in midafternoon with the day's journals, Mrs. Lettiere watches an ebb and flow of people and traffic daily and, in the slow motion of years, the changing landscape of businesses and buildings. Only Trinity Church, across the street, remains unchanged.

Mrs. Lettiere was only 15 when she began work on the day her mother, Mrs. Frank Frago, opened the newsstand on Sept. 15, 1921. On that day, the news was better than routine—the League of Nations had established an International Court of Justice. Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle had been charged with manslaughter in the death of Virginia Rappe, and Prohibition agents had raided a Hudson River pier and seized 1,250 cases of whiskey consigned to a Manhattan druggist.

Still, Mrs. Lettiere and her mother made only 21 cents that day. Business is constant. Business quickly picked up, however, with an array of papers that included The World, The Journal, The Globe, The Mail, The Graphic and other, now defunct newspapers.

While the number of papers has dwindled, sales at the stand have remained remarkably constant—about 1,000 papers a day, according to the proprietor. But running the stand has been more than a living for Mrs. Lettiere. It has been a window on a changing world.

"Old Trinity Church has got a methadone program now," she said, "and see some of the young people going up there for treatment, looking kind of dazed and lost. "One of the nicest people I know is a gentleman 80 years old, who comes here every day from his home in Brooklyn, where he lives alone, to work two or three hours a day as a messenger. He's always well-dressed and happy and stands erect. He wants to keep working and refuse to go live with his son. "I don't know his name."

Hundreds of Volunteers Aid Summer Youth Programs

By DAVID VIDAL

Joyce Dukes, a 22-year-old native of Memphis, is spending her first summer in New York City, teaching creative writing to youths in Harlem at the United Block Association, 63 East 131st Street. A writer of children's stories, she is currently unemployed. She volunteered to teach and, she says, because "as long as I am helpful to people, that helps me do my writing." "I work with 14- to 16-year-olds, from 10 to 12 in the mornings. This is my first week and I am learning a lot about myself, the students and the community. It is tremendous."

Hundreds Respond Miss Dukes is just one of several hundred volunteers who have responded to an appeal by the Citizens Committee for New York City, in cooperation with the Mayor's Voluntary Action Center, at 212 566-3994.

To Learn More If you want to volunteer to work in any of the scores of summer youth programs in the city, call the Mayor's Voluntary Action Center at 212 566-3994.

tion with the Mayor's Voluntary Action Center, for 1,000 volunteers to help staff small and large summer youth programs throughout the city. "I got them to respond to me by the idea that we should put out a magazine," said Miss Dukes, who has a master's degree from Memphis State University. "The whole environment here is different enough to create different people. It's a faster environment. But I think the children in the community need the experience of expressing themselves," she said of her impressions of Memphis and Harlem.

Volunteers have gone to work at a one-woman summer day care center attended by 80 to 100 children in Brooklyn, on mobile Parks Department recreation vans that roam the city, at a neighborhood center in the Bronx and a Boy's Club in Queens. In all, some 128 organizations and programs listed in a "Help the Youth Summer Blitz"—including such well-known ones as the Boy and Girl Scout Councils, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Police Athletic League—may benefit.

"We have gotten a fairly good response although it is very hard for us to talk in numbers," said Carol Friedland, director of Interview and Referral of the Mayor's Voluntary Action Center. "This week we have probably referred about 200 people. But whenever we call the organizations to make appointments for volunteers they always need some more. So we could certainly use more people."

Response Is Gauged. Dennis Allee, executive director of the Citizens Committee for New York City, said that "we are not getting the numbers we would like to have but we are not surprised in view of the fact that it was late and hot and Operation Sail and many other things were going on. It was a crash program, and for a lot of the small programs, getting just one volunteer is just pure gold."

Mr. Allee said many volunteers who read reports of the appeal had gone directly to community agencies. At the Mayor's Voluntary Action Center, 45-35 Kissena Boulevard in Flushing, Queens, Joan Simon, the director, said "we have had a fantastic response."

An Assemblyman Accuses Carey of Hiding Surplus

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, July 12—The state Assembly's Republican leader on financial issues accused Governor Carey today of manipulating state revenue figures and of trying to conceal a revenue surplus that could reach $140 million by the end of the year. The attack by Assemblyman William H. Stephens, Westchester Republican and ranking minority member on the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, followed the release today of the state's first-quarter revenue figures.

Mr. Stephens often speaks for the Assembly's Republican minority on fiscal matters. The figures, released by State Budget Director Peter C. Goldmark Jr., show income for April, May and June running about 9 percent ahead of last year's level, compared with the Governor's projection of a 7.6 percent increase contained in his budget.

Assemblyman Stephens argued that the income over the Governor's estimated level would amount to a revenue surplus of $140 million on an annual basis. The Legislature's Republican leaders have argued since the start of this year's session—now in recess—that revenues would outrun Mr. Carey's estimates. They have introduced—and passed in the Republican-controlled Senate—a bill that would trigger automatic tax refunds to individuals and businesses if revenues exceeded last year's receipts by more than 8.1 percent.

Mr. Carey and Mr. Goldmark have scoffed at the Republican plan, and cautioned that with some revenues such as sales tax receipts falling below estimates, the balance in the state budget is "loss certain" than when the state's "spring borrowing" notes were sold earlier this year.

Mr. Stephens' chief fiscal aide, Albert Roberts, conceded that there might be "offsetting expenses" that would swallow any revenue surplus that may state's fiscal year. But he suggested that Mr. Carey was trying to darken the state's revenue picture in order to forestall election-year demands from the Legislature for a Republican-sponsored tax cut when—and if—the legislators return for a brief closing session at the end of this month. "He's trying to make a silk purse into a sow's ear," Mr. Roberts quipped. "Mr. Goldmark has said the somber appraisal of the state's revenue picture was required to keep bondholders informed of the state's fiscal outlook."

Windfall at Stake
TRENTON, July 12—The New Jersey State Legislature may take away a $22 million-a-year windfall that New York is scheduled to get under the new state income tax law in New Jersey. The income tax law repeals the commuter tax that New Jersey has levied on New Yorkers who work in the Garden State.

This commuter tax has generally been levied at the same rate as the New York State income tax, and New Jersey has been collecting about $35 million a year from it. Because these New Yorkers pay this tax in New Jersey, the State of New York has not been collecting income taxes from them. New York has been suing New Jersey to try to have this tax declared unconstitutional, but thus far, New York has been unsuccessful.

Under the New Jersey income tax law passed last week, the $600 million or so a year that New Yorkers earn in New Jersey would be taxed by New Jersey at a rate of 2.5 percent, making New Jersey's revenues from this source $13 million a year instead of $35 million a year. The excess would automatically go to New York State.

Political Satirists Come To Cabarets in the City

"Burn da tapes." Aod Mr. Frye is off and running into politics.

Mr. Frye's Nixon, bobbing his head like a ventriloquist's dummy, is a man desperately eager to please, outgunning himself in his own platitudes and syntax. With mock bravado, he faces his audience: "I come here to New York for one reason—to make a last-ditch attempt to get the Democratic nomination."

Mr. Frye's Ford is a bumbling, convivial slice of middle America. The comedian introduces him as "the 38th President of the United States and first cousin to Smokey the Bear." Immediately, Frye-Ford, a low-pressure salesman, issues a platform: "The United States is having a going-out-of-business sale. Everything is up for sale including the state of Rhode Island."

A Guttural Growl
In contrast, Mr. Frye's Rockefeller is a high-pressure pitchman. Mr. Frye places him on the tip of his nose so that his face seems all eyes and furrowed brow. The voice drops to a guttural growl; this Rockefeller has taken elocution lessons from George C. Scott's General Patton.

Humphrey is a babbling brook of good cheer, the Happy Warrior reaching for "that he can't type" but he does not stray from politicians. At the Bird Cage, Mr. Sahl ambles to the microphone, still clutching a copy of today's newspaper. But some might ask if it is really today's newspaper. His meandering monologue often returns to the assassination of John F. Kennedy.

"Darwin Was Wrong"
Once in a while, this historical approach gives him a certain perspective. In 1776, when there was a much smaller population, observes Mr. Sahl, the country's best minds included Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Adams and Thomas Paine. Now we have: "Jerry Ford, Ronald Reagan, Jimmy Carter." Each name becomes a laugh line. Pause. "Darwin was wrong."

The country has changed since Mr. Sahl first became an angry young comic (and helped re-invent political satire), and Mr. Sahl has changed too. He talks about his assignment to offer "color" for the television audience during the convention. "NBC thinks I'm a liberal," he says, and grins. "That's one of the most insulting things I ever heard."

Jerry Brown, as a fellow Californian, is a favorite target of his. When Brown was studying to be a Jesuit, Sahl comments, "He took a vow of silence—on the major is-

Where and How

At Dangerfield's, 1118 First Avenue, between 61st and 62d Streets, DAVID FRYE is the headliner of a full evening's show. There is $5 cover charge ($6 on weekends) and a $7 minimum that includes food as well as drink. 885-1650.

MARK RUSSELL appears at the Rainbow Grill, 30 Rockefeller Plaza in Rockefeller Center, on a bill with Laloie Kazan. There is a cover charge of $7 Monday through Thursday and $8 Friday and Saturday. Drinks and dinner are served. PL 7-870.

To hear MORT SAHL for 50 minutes in the Bird Cage at Michael's Pub, 211 East 55th St., one has to pay a cover charge of $10 plus a two-drink minimum (with all drinks, including wine, at $2.50 a glass). No food or coffee is served. 758-2272.

It costs $5.50 a ticket to see THE CONVENTION perform at the Bottom Line, 15 West Fourth Street. Food and drinks can be purchased. 228-6300.

office, any office. I'll take anything," he admits. "God-dam it! I deserve to be President."

Mr. Frye's Reagan, mild-mannered and unflappable, is still playing Jimmy Stewart's friend. He starts to sing, almost to himself, "The Possible Dream." Mr. Frye interrupts his imitation to offer an apology: Reagan just isn't funny; anything he says comes out dull.

But if Reagan is difficult to satirize, what do you do with Jimmy Carter? In common with many Americans, Mr. Frye is trying to focus on Carter. How do you "do" Carter? He has no easily ridiculed characteristics. How do you imitate teeth?

Lull Before the Lull
Mr. Russell, in his first public engagement in New York in seven years, greets Carter's evangelism. "Jimmy Carter went to Philadelphia for the Bicentennial," he says. "He layed hands on the Liberty Bell and the crack was healed. Hallelujah!"

The convention, says Mr. Russell, is the lull before the lull. How do you find Madison Square Garden? he asks. "Look for the Star in the East. Two months ago, the light reflecting off of Mr. Carter's teeth created such a glow that three wise men showed up bearing the New York delegation."

Some Mr. Russell's funniest gibes have nothing to do with the convention (representative Bella Abzug's male secretary has confessed sues." If Brown won the nomination, his running mate would be "his inner self."

No Stimulants
About Republicans, Mr. Sahl says, "It is safe to say that President Ford doesn't use any stimulants" and "if Reagan were President he probably would have fired on Queen Elizabeth's party."

On the Democratic convention: "John Glenn is going to plant an American flag in New York. One great step backward for mankind." Carter's assistant Jody Powell is "director of revelations" and Mr. Sahl talks about "this coronation on Wednesday."

A new improvisational group, the Convention, organized by Janet Coleman and David Dozer, is trying to reassess the ancient art with a mock convention. At the Bottom Line, a revolving cast of 10 begins with pre-session announcements.

"Will the Texas delegation please stand up? You're sitting on Rhode Island."

Later, states compete in yielding to one another for nominations.

"Michigan, which leads the world in hub caps, yields to . . ."

"Puerto Rico, the home of Jose Ferrer and half of Gerardo Rivera, yields to . . ."

And in a dulcet tone, "Nebraska, home of two talk show hosts, will be back in a moment after yielding in . . ."

Finally the nomination is won—by Mickey Mouse.

Resolution by Rules Panel Praises the Israeli Rescue

The Democratic Rules Committee yesterday praised the Israeli raid that rescued more than 100 hostages at Entebbe Airport in Uganda, but said that it could not allow the resolution to be debated on the convention floor because of its own rules. United Press International reported.

The committee was obviously overweighing in favor of the resolution, but it supported Martha W. Griffiths of Michigan, the committee chairman, 56 to 35, when she ruled it out of order, saying that it had no Platform Committee or the Rules Committee in time.

As a compromise, the committee adopted the resolution as an expression of its own sentiment.

The resolution was taken up as the Rules Committee met briefly before the convention. No other substantive issues were raised.

The resolution aid the committee "congratulates the State of Israel, its people and its government upon the courageous mission of its armed forces at Entebbe Airport and its rescue of the innocent hostages held by terrorist forces."

High Rio Bus Toll
RIO DE JANEIRO, (UPI)—About 50 percent of Rio de Janeiro's public buses were involved in accidents in 1975, the research division of the state department of transportation has reported.

Despite Strauss's Vow, Convention Opens Late

Robert S. Strauss, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, had pledged that the party's 27th national convention would run strictly according to schedule. But like every other part convention, it got started late. United Press International reported.

Mr. Strauss was trying to avoid a reputation of what had happened at Miami Beach in 1972 when sessions ran well into the morning hours and ranged from boisterous to boring.

The opening session yesterday was delayed 15 minutes past the scheduled 8 P.M. starting time. Peter Duchin's orchestra played Dixieland jazz and military music to fill the gap.

Before banking the gavel, Mr. Strauss strolled around the podium, waving and blowing kisses to the delegates.

India's Ban on Violence Inhibits Production and Investment

fighting scenes. "Financiers are the same for every kind of movie and if the investment is locked up in one movie there will be no money for another. The whole movie industry is paralyzed."

India is the second-largest movie-producing country in the world, after Japan. One movie a day is released in one language or another, most of them in Hindi, and most of them made in Bombay. Movie producers are now negotiating with the Government for a relaxation of censorship, at least in regard to the fighting scenes. There is no indication yet that the Government will give in.

The Government has justified the ban on violence on the ground that it brought out the animal instinct in the average moviegoer. Crime has been on the increase in many cities and many of the ingenious murders, robberies and kidnappings are said to have been patterned after such felonies in some of the movies.

The ban on excessive violence and sex has hit some foreign movies, too. More than a dozen films, such as "The Godfather" and "The Exorcist" have been refused permission for screening in India. An equal number of Indian-language movies have been banned in the last month.

Movie makers are in panic and thousand of artists and technicians are facing a bleak future. Studios reported a flood of cancellations of bookings. One popular studio in Bombay shot for only 23 days in May, against the monthly average of 50 or more shooting days. Last month there was a 50 percent drop, and beginning this month, there has been a further decline.

Specialists Are Hurt

It is unthinkable for an average Indian producer to make a movie without throwing in a couple of thousand feet of thrilling fight scenes. Often it is the climax scene, in which the hero, in the presence of a despairing heroine, guns down or bashes the villain and half a dozen other criminals single-handedly.

Among others hurt by the ban are the fight-composers, directors and stuntmen who were gaining an important position in films, on a par with the music director or art director.

Asim Bhal, for example, who is fight-composer and director, commanded a high price of 400 rupees, or $50, a day when he was working.

"I've been in this business for 30 years," he said. "I have been in sword fights, fist fights, gun fights, galloped on horses, crashed through glass panes, jumped 30 feet. I have organized fight scenes that thrilled the people. I'm not wanted."

Asim Bhal, who had been in the Indian cavalry regiment before he joined the movies 30 years ago, said that for the skill and risk involved in fighting scenes the pay was not much.

He said he hoped that the ban on fight scenes would be a passing phase, because people who were used to enjoying fight scenes reacted adversely if they were suddenly denied them. One recent film, he said, had a fight scene that was cut to the barest minimum, lasting only a few seconds. It was so farcical, he said, that the audience started shouting and tearing cushions off their seats.

Budget Cut Forces Hunter to Cancel All Arts Events

By DONAL HENAHAN

Allegedly, a public hearing was held on the budget cut of $3.6 million last week. The Hunter Foundation, which had been planning a series of arts events, including a concert by the Hunter Foundation Orchestra, a play by the Hunter Foundation Theatre, and a series of lectures, has decided to cancel all its arts events for the year.

The Hunter Foundation, which was founded in 1943, has been a major force in the development of the arts in New York City. It has supported a wide range of cultural activities, from the Hunter Foundation Orchestra to the Hunter Foundation Theatre to the Hunter Foundation Lectures.

The foundation's budget for this year was $150,000, but it has been cut to $146,400. The foundation's president, Mrs. Wexler, said that the cut was "a disaster" and that she had no choice but to cancel all its arts events.

The foundation's board of directors has approved the cut, and Mrs. Wexler has announced that she will be leaving the foundation in the next few weeks. She has been the foundation's president since 1973.

The foundation's annual report, which was released last week, shows that the foundation's assets are $125,000. Mrs. Wexler said that the foundation's income for the year was $45,000, and that it had a deficit of $100,000 for the year.

The foundation's board of directors has decided to raise the foundation's dues for the next year, but Mrs. Wexler said that she did not want to do that. She said that she would like to see the foundation's budget restored to its former level.

Abbey Theater Joins Bicentennial Fete

In an absence of 38 Abbey Theater, Irregular theater, will weeks in the United Kingdom Nov. 6, to the Bicentennial.

The Abbey Theater, which was founded in 1890, is one of the oldest and most important theaters in the world. It has a long and distinguished history, and has produced many of the world's greatest plays.

The Abbey Theater is joining the Bicentennial Fete, which is being held in New York City to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the city's founding. The fete will include a wide range of cultural activities, from music to theater to dance.

The Abbey Theater will be performing a play by the Irish playwright, J.M. Synge, titled "The Playboy of the Western World." The play is one of the most famous plays ever written, and has been performed in many different languages and in many different countries.

The Abbey Theater's performance will be part of a series of events that will be held at the theater throughout the year. The theater's board of directors has announced that it will be performing a total of 10 plays during the year.

Shirley MacLaine Returning to Films

Shirley MacLaine, who has been touring in her one-woman revue here and abroad, will return to the screen after an absence of four years as co-star of the Herbert Ross film, "The Turning Point." It was announced yesterday by Alan Ladd Jr., senior vice-president of 20th-Century-Fox.

The film, co-starring Anne Bancroft, will be produced and directed by Mr. Ross and will begin shooting Aug. 9 in New York. Arthur Laurents wrote the original screenplay.

Nadia Comaneci of Rumania, favored to win in gymnastics

The United States has not won a medal in fencing since 1960, but this may be the year. In the saber—the weapon that recalls Errol Flynn and Basil Rathbone swiping at each other for a lady's hand—Paul Apostol of New York City has a good chance of winning a bronze medal.
Apostol, who was a semifinalist in the 1972 Games, will be part of a strong saber contingent that includes 23-year-old Peter Westbrook of New York City, a rapidly improving fencer whose forte is defense. Westbrook won the New York Athletic Club's annual International fencing challenge last March, conquering most of the fencers he will meet in Montreal.
But Apostol's previous Olympic experience should give him an edge.
Of the three fencing events, saber, foil and epee, there are fewer teams at the top of saber competition. Rumania and Poland field the strongest-saber squads but there is room for an American bid.

Dave Anderson
'The Destroyer' From Fosterville

His name is George Foster, a gentle name that shelters the notoriety he deserves. Of all the hitters in tonight's All-Star Game, George Foster of the Cincinnati Reds has been the most productive in the triple crown categories this season. He leads the major leagues with 72 runs batted in.
He shares fourth in the major leagues with 17 home runs.
He's the National League's sixth leading batter with a .327 average. He's not unappreciated. Except for Greg Luzinski of the Philadelphia Phillies, he received more votes in the fans All-Star ballot than any other National League outfielder. But his name is George Foster, a gentle name for a gentle personality. He's the Reds left fielder but he'll be in center field tonight because Greg Luzinski and Dave Kingman are the other starting outfielders. Greg Luzinski—that's a name that doesn't need a nickname. Greg Luzinski sound big. So does Dave Kingman, whose 30 homers have inspired such nicknames as Kong and Sky King, nicknames a baseball fan can identify with. But for all his accomplishments this season, George Foster hasn't had a nickname. Until now.
"I call him 'The Destroyer,'" says Sparky Anderson, the Reds manager. "He is destruction personified."
"I hadn't heard that," George Foster said. "But that's Sparky's description. I guess it's all right."
The Bible, Karate and Hypnosis
George Foster isn't that concerned with a nickname.
For him, George Foster is enough. It's enough for the Reds, too. In the years when Pete Rose was their left fielder, that area of Riverfront Stadium was known as the Rose Garden; now it's known as Fosterville in honor of a 27-year-old bachelor whose success involves a strange mixture of the Bible, karate and hypnosis.
"I'm more versed in the Bible than karate," George Foster said. "The Bible teaches you about an outlook on life. I might have a bad day in the eyes of the fans but if I've given my best, I haven't had a bad day. The Bible has helped me understand myself and understand other people.
Karate has helped me keep my concentration longer than in the past."
His concentration now is so deep that he is among the most deliberate players in taking his stance in the batter's box.
"I'm getting my concentration ready," George Foster explained. "If you go up there as if it's just another turn to hit, you'll be just another out. Some of the pitchers don't like it. Some of them fold their arms and give me a scolding look. I'm not trying to psyche them. I'm just trying to get myself ready to hit."
Three years ago he got himself ready for the Reds by undergoing hypnosis in Indianapolis.
"The Reds had sent me down to the American Association," he recalled. "I didn't like it at the time but it turned out to be a turning point for me. I knew something was wrong with me and I knew that other baseball players, such as Maury Wills, had undergone hypnosis. I went to a

Dr. Bernstein for two and a half months, I forget his first name. The treatments improved my desire, my confidence and my aggressiveness as a hitter."
The Reds had obtained George Foster in a 1971 trade that the San Francisco Giants would like to forget—Foster in exchange for Frank Duffy, now the Cleveland Indians shortstop, and Vern Gelsbert, no longer in the majors.
"That was the year Bobby Tolan got hurt early and was out for the season and we needed a center fielder," Sparky Anderson said. "We had tried Hal McRae and Buddy Breadford in center field and we weren't satisfied. But then Chris Speiser got hurt and the Giants needed a shortstop.
We had Duffy and they wanted to give us guys we didn't want but then they mentioned Foster and Bob Howsam [the Reds' president] jumped at it. Not that George was a center fielder but he was too good to pass up."
George Foster drifted down to Indianapolis, then returned to the Reds but never played regularly until Sparky Anderson decided to shift Pete Rose to third base early last season.
"We needed offense at third base," the Reds manager said. "I knew that George was unhappy not playing. I didn't blame him. But we decided to find out if he's as good a hitter as we thought he might be. As it turned out, having George in left field made the difference in our ball club winning the World Series last year."
George Foster batted .300 last season with 78 runs batted in and 23 homers but he's even better this year.
In recent weeks, he has been the Reds clean-up hitter, displacing Tony Perez and Johnny Bench from that distinguished role.
Morgan Changes Heroes
"I was rooting for Tony Perez to win the most valuable player award this year, he's been our unsung hero," says Joe Morgan, last year's winner. "But now I'd like to see George Foster win it. He's been incredibly great."
The Reds consider the M.V.P. award as a team trophy.
In the last six years, three Reds have won it a total of four times—Bench twice, Rose and Morgan each once.
"George is a disciplined hitter now," Sparky Anderson said. "He used to try to pull the ball too much by opening up his stance but Ted Kluszewski [the Reds' batting coach] convinced him that he didn't have to open up, his hands were fast enough to do the job. Klus's theory is that the hands do all the work. But another factor is George's strength. He's like Hank Aaron, he doesn't look that big and strong but he is. At the time of impact, George is like Joe Morgan in generating the speed of the bat. He's only the third guy to hit a home run in the red seats of our top deck—Tony Perez did it twice; Bob Bailey and now The Destroyer. He's a wiry and long, he's a big man. He's 6-1 and 195-198 pounds. He doesn't have an ounce on him.
He's got a 30-inch waist."
"Well it's really not 30 any more," George Foster confessed. "It's closer to 31 now."

Ford Asks Reversal on Taiwan;
Olympic Body to Meet Today

A Bitter Debate
Forecast Over Games Issue

By STEVE CADY
Special to The New York Times
MONTREAL, July 12—Last-ditch efforts to keep Taiwan in the Olympic Games began taking shape today on a broad political front.
Sources within the International Olympic Committee predicted a bitter floor fight when the group's nine-member executive board recommends acceptance of Canada's ban against Taiwanese athletes. The I.O.C., headed by Lord Killanin of Ireland, opens its 78th session here tomorrow.
Neither the Taiwanese flag nor anthem bears any resemblance of those of China. The Taiwanese Government's Republic of China flag is red with a 12-point white star within a blue square in the upper left-hand corner.
Under the compromise proposed by the I.O.C. but so far rejected by Taiwan, its athletes would march with a five-ringed Olympic flag and carry a 12-point white star over Taiwanese participation, and that the I.O.C. "had no other alternative" but to accept the Canadian Government's terms. Canada has refused to allow the 42-athlete Taiwan delegation

President Calls
Ban by I.O.C.
'Bad Decision'

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, July 12—President Ford called today for the reversal of a decision by the International Olympic Committee's executive board that would keep athletes from Taiwan from competing in the Montreal games.
In a telephone call to Phillip H. Krumm, the president of the United States Olympic Committee, he called the board's action "a bad decision" and urged that the influence of the American delegation be used to seek a reversal. The White House press secretary, Ron Nessen, reported today.
Nessen said that it was premature to say if the President would urge that the United States team withdraw from the Games if the I.O.C. did not change its decision to bow to the demand by Canada, the host country, that Taiwan's athletes be barred if they compete under the banner of the Republic of China.
"The President hopes and expects this controversy will be resolved," Nessen said, adding that he meant a reso-

Service

Israelis

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times
MONTREAL, July 12—Canadian and international Jewry, joined by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and many other leaders, held a solemn memorial service tonight for the 11 members of the 1972 Israeli Olympic team who were slain by terrorists in Munich four years ago.
The impressive tribute, attended by thousands of Canadians of all faiths, was organized by leading Canadian Jewish societies after Israeli Olympic officials had failed in an effort to have the International Olympic Committee sponsor a memorial observance as part of the program for the Montreal Games.
More than 100 leading Canadians, including Prime Minister Trudeau, and six provincial premiers, lent their names to the project as official sponsors.
The Prime Minister's part in the ceremony consisted of the reading of a psalm, which he delivered in a low voice in French, the official lan-

Fidrych vs. Jones Tonight:
Unusual All-Star Matchup

By JOSEPH DURSO
Special to The New York Times
PHILADELPHIA, July 12—With peace suddenly breaking out on the labor front, professional baseball heaved a sigh of relief tonight and prepared for its 47th All-Star Game.
It will be staged here tomorrow night before President Ford, a sellout crowd of 61,000 and a television audience (ABC, Channel 7, 8 o'clock) not otherwise occupied with the Democratic National Convention.
The chief business will be to determine whether the American League can ungan-gle the grip that the National League has fastened on the game in recent years. The Nationals have won 12 of the last 13 games and hold a lead of 27 to 15 in the series with one tie.
But the chief interest will focus on the two starting pitchers, a pair of highly colorful, immensely successful and moderately paid young stars—Mark Fidrych of the Detroit Tigers, a 21-year-old right-bander who "talks" to the ball on the mound, and Randy Jones of the San Diego Padres, a 26-year-old left-bander who has won 16 games in half a season.
In the era of the free agent in baseball—an era that took a giant step forward today when the club owners and players reached a peace formula—the two pitchers already have captured national attention with their raggsto-riches work. And for three innings tomorrow night in Veterans Stadium, the public will have its first chance to watch them cavort in the same spotlight.
Jones was the first to demonstrate extreme tenacities when he lost 22 games as a rookie with a last-place team two years ago. Then, in a startling reversal, he won 20 games last summer.
And, in an even more startling rise, he rushed to a

Mark Fidrych, Tigers' rookie whose record is 9-2, demonstrates his grip to Randy Jones of San Diego, whose record is 16-3 this year. Both will start the All-Star Game tonight.

Broken Wrist Won't Stop Olympian

By FRANK LITSKY
Special to The New York Times
PLATTSBURG, N.Y., July 12—Miguel (Mike) Roche may not reach the final of the Olympic 3,000-meter steeplechase, but he seems sure to set an Olympic record. He may become the only man ever to run an Olympic steeplechase with a broken wrist.

The injury is a souvenir of the United States Olympic trials at Eugene, Ore., on June 27, the last day of the trials. Roche became 23 years old. That was also the day of the steeplechase final, with the first three finishers to make the American team that will compete two weeks from now at Montreal.

Roche had just caught the third-place man when they came to the last hurdle, 70 meters from the finish. He was running too fast, and his right knee cracked into the hurdle. He fell over it and tried to break the fall with his left hand. Instead, he in-

"Before I landed, I was thinking of getting up," he said. "But I didn't see how I could catch him. I don't even remember if I knew I was gaining on him. I saw what I thought was the finish line and I leaned into it. I didn't know if I got him."

He got him, all right—by two-hundredths of a second, or half an inch. Then his left wrist and right knee started hurting. Twenty minutes later, while lying on a trainer's table, came the official announcement that he had finished third and made the team. He threw up his arms, shouted "oh, my God" and started passing out.

He was taken to a hospital, where X-rays showed no broken bones. Then the ice was taken off his knee and he was passed out again.

Last Thursday, at the Olympic track team's training camp here, more X-rays were taken of the left wrist. They showed a fracture, and the wrist was put in a plaster cast. When President Ford was here last Saturday, he signed the cast "Jerry Ford." But President or no, the cast will come off for the Olympics.

Roche is from Cranford, N.J., a mighty mile of 5 feet 3½ inches and 135 pounds. He was graduated from Rutgers in 1975, the year he set the ICA meet record of 8 minutes 41 seconds. His personal record is 8:31.8 this year, leaving him in another league from Anders Garderud of Sweden, the Olympic favorite and world record-holder at 8:09.8. Roche said he could wait.

"I'm just looking for improvement," he said. "I used to run at the national level. Now I'm at the bottom of the international level. That's progress."

Now that he has progressed as a runner, what about those night-before dreams?

"I slept badly the night before the trials final," he said. "I was lying in bed staring at the wall, and I saw barriers 20 feet high. I dreamed of jumping the barriers and having them fall on me. I dreamed I was running a steeplechase against high school kids, and I was wearing overalls and work shoes and I was trying to roll up the overalls while I was running. I had to climb over the barriers and the kids were jumping over them and running by me."

Hours after those dreams, he ran his fateful race, and the nightmares continued.

"It was like a fantasy," he said. "It was like I was way up here looking down, like I was watching it instead of it happening to me."

Debate Over I.O.C. Ruling

the group's 78-member board of directors could be asked to ratify its executive committee's recommendation. The board has never overturned a ruling by its executive committee.

But Julian Roosevelt, one of two American members of the board, said there was a good chance the proposal would be rejected. Opposition to the recommendation was particularly strong among South American and Scandinavian countries. The Soviet Union also reportedly was ready to back the Taiwanese.

"I'm sure 90 percent of the members are opposed to this capitulation," Roosevelt said. "I think we've got to call Trudeau's bluff. Let him call this the Montreal Games if he wants, but out the Olympic Games."

Politics and Economics

Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau has indicated repeatedly through the I.O.C. that the Taiwan ruling was a political decision from which Canada cannot withdraw. His Government is heavily involved economically with China, and has no diplomatic relations with Taiwan.

Goods from Taiwan are not permitted into Canada if they bear any kind of "China" label. This is the same standard being applied to Taiwanese athletes.

Lord Killanin, sharply critical of the Government's ban, says the I.O.C. was "duped by a 1969 Canadian Government letter that promised all Olympic athletes would be allowed into the country pursuant to normal procedures."

The I.O.C. awarded the 1976 Summer Games to Montreal in 1970, the same year Canada broke diplomic relations with Taiwan and recognized mainland China. I.O.C. officials say they assumed "normal procedures" on entry into Canada meant refusing to admit a person infected with, say, smallpox.

Concern over the Canadian ruling has been grave because far-reaching implications are feared. This is the first time in Olympic history athletes have been prevented from entering a country to compete. The Taiwanese are still waiting for clearance in Boston, Detroit, Los Angeles and Dallas.

"It's bad for the future," said Lawrence S. Ting, chief of the Taiwanese delegation here. "Many bad things will happen."

The Soviet Union, scheduled to stage the 1980 Olympics, also appears worried by the political intrusion of mainland China. Peking wants to get back into the I.O.C., but only on the condition that Taiwan be kicked out. That battle will take place here this week, too.

Unless the Olympic situation stabilizes, the Russians reportedly fear a disruption of their games in 1980. There has been speculation that Peking might stage its own "Olympics" at the same time, drawing Third World nations away from the Moscow competition.

Another controversy gained momentum today when African leaders stepped up their call for a boycott of the Games unless the I.O.C. threw New Zealand out.

As for Lord Killanin, he apparently feels withdrawal of Olympic sanction from the Games which open next Saturday, would be not only unfair to the athletes, but also disastrous for the I.O.C.

"If we withdrew sanction now," he said, "we'd lose control forever." Money also is a consideration. If sanction was withdrawn from the Games, the United States has threatened to pull out. That could mean a contractual withdrawal by ABC-Television, leaving the I.O.C. virtually bankrupt.

Meanwhile, the hostess at Taiwan's unoccupied headquarters in Olympic Village continues to answer the phone with a greeting of "Republic of China."

The American quarters are getting a bit more crowded. A second group of 132 United States athletes arrived today, joining 67 who reached Montreal last Saturday. Today's contingent included fencers, boxers, canoeists, cyclists, equestrian riders, weight lifters, judo players and women swimmers. Nearly 50 percent of the 425-member American team is now here.

Stockton Puts Fisher Out, 6-2, 6-2

CINCINNATI, July 12 (UPI)—Fifth-seeded Dick Stockton defeated Rick Fisher of Palo Alto, Calif., 6-2, 6-2, today in the opening round of the 89th annual Western tennis championships.

In other matches, unseeded Woody Blocher of San Marino, Calif., upset 15th-seeded John Whitlinger of Temah, Wis., 6-1, 6-4. Erick Van Dillen defeated Paul Gerken of East Norwalk, Conn., 6-1, 6-0, and Brian Teacher fought back to beat Chris Kachel of Australia, 3-6, 6-1, 6-2.

Terry Ryan of South Africa needed three sets to beat Larry Collins of Irving, Calif., 6-1, 2-6, 7-6, and Al Gardner of Australia downed Tom Kreiss of Los Angeles 4-6, 7-5, 6-2. Top seeded Eddie Dibbs did not play.

Tom Geram, Seattle, defeated Nick Savano, Riverdale, N.J., 7-6, 6-2. Terry Moor, Monroe, La., defeated Francis Gonzalez, Puerto Rico, 6-3, 6-4. Bob Medley, Atlanta, defeated John Peckham, Cincinnati, 6-1, 6-2. Jim Warwick, Riverside, Ill., defeated Hank Pfister, Bakersfield, Calif., 6-3, 6-4. Mike Cahill, Wilmington, Del., defeated Russell Simmons, New Zealand, 6-2, 6-3. Sasha Metson, India, defeated Juneyoung Hwa, Corpus Christi, Tex., 7-5, 6-3. Pat Dupre, South Africa, defeated Dick Dett, Bermuda, 6-4, 6-4.

Passarell Scores

KITZBUHEL, Austria, July 12 (AP)—A $50,000 grand prix tennis tournament began today with third-seeded Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia defeating Rudolf Hoskowitz of Austria, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Charlie Passarell defeated John Feaver of Britain, 6-4, 7-5. Norman Holmes, another American, topped Frank Gebert of West Germany, 6-4, 6-3. Jim McManus of the United States lost to Hungary's Peter Szocze, 6-3, 6-3.

Mary McLean was the only American to win in the first round. She defeated Austria's Veronika Metzger-Bueche, 6-3, 6-0.

Giants List Available Season Tickets

A mail order sale of 12,000 season subscription seats for the Giants' new football stadium in Hackensack Meadows was announced yesterday. All the available seats are in end-zone locations. Tickets for the seven-game home schedule, which begins on Oct. 12 against the Dallas Cowboys, are priced at $63. Applicants are limited to four tickets.

They should send a check or money order with name and return address to the New York Football Giants, 15 Columbus Circle, New York, N.Y. 10023. The number of tickets ordered should be multiplied by $63, plus an addition of 50 cents for postage and handling. Applications will be accepted by mail only.

Urges Gymnastics: U.S. Hopes Are Dim

petition of the Rumanian teen-ager as well as that of her Soviet teammates, Olga Korbut, who as a pint-sized 17-year-old took two individual golds and one silver in 1972; will be back for another try along with Nellie Kim, a 19-year-old who upset Miss Turishcheva for the Soviet national gymnastic cup in May.

Miss Comenczi discounts the threat of the Soviet competitors and huffily declares that her friend and teammate, Teodora Ungueanu, will provide the most difficult challenge.

On the sidelines of this battle between the Soviet Union and Rumania will be a young team of American women who swept 16 gold medals in the Pan-American games. But facing the East Europeans is another matter. The only medal ever won by an American team in women's gymnastics was a team bronze in 1948.

The American team's strongest entry is probably Kathy Howard, 18, of Oklahoma City, who finished first in the American Olympic trials despite competing with a broken toe. In the invitation American World Cup competition in March, Miss Howard finished second to Miss Comenczi by 1.65 points. The Rumanian had scored 39.75 of a possible 40 points, including a perfect floor exercise rated 10, the maximum.

The United States' best hope for an individual medal will be Miss Howard in the free exercise. Kollent Casey, 16, of St. Paul in the vault and Debra Ann Willcox, 16, of Littleton, Colo., in the vault and uneven bars. Kimberly Chao, 20, of Lake Park Fla., is the only athlete returning from the 1972 team. This year's youngest American gymnast is 14-year-old Jodi Yocum of Reading, Pa.

Miss Turishcheva at 24 and Miss Korbut, now 21, are old by current standards. The trend set by Miss Korbut herself has been toward more athletic and acrobatic routines favoring the lighter bodies of young girls. The teen-agers have a greater strength-to-weight ratio, and their weight is still well balanced. When their figures mature the weight will move down to the hips and make some routines more difficult.

Although teen-agers can perform well, coaches the world over are worried about the effect of Olympic pressure on young personalities.

"The kids are too young psychologically and physiologically," said Vladimir Smolevsky, a former Olympian who heads the gymnastics department at the Soviet Union's most prestigious coaches institute. "But it is very hard to direct this movement all over the world. The problem is they are allowed to participate in the Olympic Games at age 14. That's why we speed up our gymnastics development. In my opinion, it is too early."

The United States men's team is within its grasp. The last medal won by the United States men's gymnastics was the 1932 silver team. The Soviet Union and Japan are the favorites for the team gold and silver this year. Japan has monopolized the gold medal since 1960 with the Soviet Union always a painfully close second.

"If the political stuff can be eliminated," said Gene Wettstone, manager of the United States team, "we figure to be in a three-way battle with East Germany and Hungary for the team bronze."

The individual events will provide some surprising moments. Mihai Bors of Rumania has prepared a new dismount from the rings that he will reveal in Montreal. His coach claims it provides more thrills and daring than the dismount originated by Mitsuo Tsukahara of Japan that includes a number of twists and somersaults. Nikolai Andrianov, who finished fourth at Munich over all and was runner-up to the 1974 world championships, is the favorite for all-round honors this year.

The United States will present strong medal candidates in Bart Conner, a lithe blonde 18-year-old from Moraga, Calif., and Peter Korman, a 19-year-old from New Haven. The United States' best chance is for a medal on the parallel or high bars to which all but one member of the seven-man team are capable of scoring between 9.6 and 9.8. Wayne Young of University Park, Pa., has the strongest routine on the rings; Kurt Thomas of Terre Haute, Ind., specializes in the pommel horse, and Korman has an excellent floor-exercise routine.

ed Poland in a small European competition. Favored to win the individual gold medal in saber is Vladimir Nazlimov of the Soviet Union.

In the foil events, "It'll be pure luck to come in the top six in the men's or women's competition," said John Norma of Bath, N.Y., an alternate on the foil team.

France and the Soviet Union have by far the best men's foil teams, followed by a cluster of countries: Rumania, West Germany, Italy, Hungary and Japan. The top individualist is considered to be Christian Noel of France, a tall, reed-thin fencer with a light touch and catlike step.

In the women's foil competition, Italy, the Soviet Union and Hungary are likely to be the three top teams, with France providing some good individual performances. The United States' fastest rising female fencer is Nikki Franke of Philadelphia, but in international competition the American women will not be a factor.

"I hate to say it," said Norma, "but our women are in terrible physical shape. Denise O'Connor is in her mid-40's, which is really too old to be on an international level, and Annie O'Donnell's physical conditioning is poor. Now the Russians—they're in great shape."

The Soviet Union has won the women's gold medal in three of the last four Olympics, finishing second to Hungary in 1964.

In men's epee the United States may be able to produce a couple of good individual efforts. Scott Bozek of Falls Church, Va.; Brooke Makler of Philadelphia, and Paul Pesthy of San Antonio, Tex., are all returnees from the 1972 team.

Makler has spent two years competing in Europe since the last Olympics, so he should be improved. There are about 10 equally strong teams in epee, but the favored individual is Alexander Pusch of West Germany.

leading citizens from various parts of Canada.

The widows of three of the Munich victims—Yessif Romano, a weight lifter; Kehat Shor, the rifle coach; and Andrei Spitzer, a fencer—were present, as was the 1976 Israeli team.

"The spirit of Munich still roams the world," the chairman of the event, Rabbi W. Gunther Plant of Toronto, told the reverent audience.

"The time is passed for mouthing pious words. Unless there is an answer that comes from the nations of the world, the clouds will form once again and beyond Entebbe there will be other Munichs," there will be other Munichs," Ephraim Katon, the Israeli President, said in a message read by Mordecai Shalev, the Israeli Ambassador to Canada.

"As the Montreal Olympics approach, re-emphasizing for all of us the international fraternity of sport, the memory of the massacre in Munich haunts us even more powerfully."

The shadow of Munich on the games is clear here in the security force of 16,000 police and military personnel deployed by the Canadian Government to protect the 12,000 participating athletes and officials against another terrorist incident.

Streets surrounding the synagogue, were guarded by the police and blocked to motor traffic while mourners for the victims of the Munich terrorist attack began to gather two hours before the ceremony.

The sanctuary of the synagogue, designed to hold 1,100 persons in wooden pews, was jammed with notables and reporters and cameramen from many countries.

Organizers of the memorial estimated that another 5,000 persons watched the ceremony from elsewhere in the building on closed-circuit television. The service had been advertised in newspapers of principal cities around the country, and many Canadian Jews planning to attend the Games came early for the service.

New Baseball Pact Reached, Limiting Reserve System

divided into two parts—a four-year basic agreement covering working conditions and economic terms other than players' salaries, and a four-year benefit plan. The eight-member player relations committee approved the terms unanimously. The players' executive board favored the 22-0 with one abstention.

Negotiators and other officials declined to disclose details of the settlement, saying they wanted to provide the owners and players with their first-hand. However, these key details were learned:

• A player will have the right to trade after having played in the majors for five years. He will have a veto right over six clubs. If he is not traded, he will become a free agent.

• Players who become free agents, including those now governed by the Andy Messersmith decision, will be able to negotiate with a maximum of 12 teams, starting with the inverse order of the previous season standings. Each club will be limited in the number of free agents it can sign, being permitted a maximum of one, for example, of the free-agent pool totals one to 14. However, a club will be able to sign as many free agents as it might lose in any one season.

• The only compensation for a lost player will be draft choices. If one of the 12 lowest teams signs a player, it would lose its second choice in the next draft of college and high school players to the player's former team. If one of the top 12 teams signs a player, it would forfeit its No. 1 draft choice.

• Players can take their salary differences to arbitration as they did before the 1974 season. However, if a player is eligible to become a free agent, his salary dispute can go to arbitration only by mutual consent of the player and the club.

• The owners will increase their contribution to the benefit or pension plan, from $6.45 million to $8.3 million.

• The minimum salary was raised, retroactive to the beginning of this season, from $16,000 to $19,000 this year, $19,000 next and $21,000 each in 1978 and 1979.

• The players who will experience the first effects of the new agreement are the 39 who have not signed contracts this season. Under an arbitrator's interpretation of the renewal clause of the uniform players contract, the players can become free agents by playing one year without a new contract.

Players in this category now include Fred Lynn, Joe Rudi, Rollie Fingers, Reggie Jackson, Ken Holtzman, Graig Nettles and Bert Campaneris. However, the number of unsigned players has shrunk steadily all season and, undoubtedly, will shrink even more before the season ends Oct. 3.

It was a decision by Peter in the grievance filed by Messersmith and Dave McNally, that marked the beginning of the end of baseball's reserve system. Two Federal courts subsequently upheld that ruling and the owners finally—although reluctantly—were convinced that they had to negotiate a new player control system.

If not, all players were eligible to become free agents by playing one year without a new contract.

Players who have signed contracts still will be able to exercise that right when their contracts eventually expire.

However, a new uniform players contract without the controversial renewal clause will be drawn up and the 24 clubs will attempt to induce the already-signed players to sign those new documents as replacements. That would eliminate their opportunity to become free agents after an option year.

The new agreement will take effect as soon as it is ratified. The factor then governing a player's status would be the time he signed his contract. If he signed it before ratification of the agreement, he would be governed by the Messersmith decision. If he signs the contract after ratification, he will be covered by the six-year plan for free agency.

The members of the players' executive board were uncharacteristically close-mouthed about today's proceedings and the details of the agreement. However, it was learned that they were highly pleased with the terms. They realized there could never be an agreement if they didn't give in on their rights under the Messersmith ruling, but the owners were seen as giving considerably more ground than the players.

For example, in the owners' last previous proposals that were made public in April, they offered free agency after eight years and the right to demand a trade after seven. For compensation, besides draft choices, they proposed a monetary formula that had a maximum of $270,000. The players, at the same time, were proposing free agency after six seasons, the right to demand a trade after five and no compensation.

The negotiations actually began in June 1975, but nothing significant occurred until after Setz's decision last December. Even then, talks dragged on until the owners decided last Feb. 23 that spring camps would not open until an agreement had been reached. However, Rubin opened March 18 and some people believed negotiations would speed up.

Other, however, foresaw the opposite and, indeed, the talks dragged so slowly that they came to a virtual halt. In recent weeks, however, the negotiators tried a new tactic. Instead of holding formal negotiating sessions in either Miller's office or that of John Gaherin, the owners' labor representative, they began meeting informally in seclusion at the Biltmore Hotel in New York.

This routine proved much more effective. The negotiators began making progress. The movement last week was crucial. That was the final week before Miller would meet with his executive board for the last time this season. If no settlement were reached now, it was very likely the season would end without an agreement and players would become free agents in a conceivably chaotic situation.

Last Tuesday, the five negotiators met all day at the Biltmore. The group consisted of Miller and Richard Moss, the Players Association Counsel, and Gaherin and the two league presidents, Lee MacPhail and Charles (Chub) Feeney.

Traveling Talks
The following day, they held a brief session. Then the owners' trio flew to Chicago for a meeting of the player relations committee. They returned to New York Thursday morning, leaving Chicago at 6:45 A.M., and again met with Miller and Moss at the Biltmore. Each day produced a little more movement.

On Friday, the tactics were altered somewhat. Miller, Moss and Gaherin discussed the differences in their positions during lunch at the Barclay Hotel. The Saturday negotiations took place strictly on the telephone, primarily between Miller and Gaherin. Then, yesterday, the five-man negotiating group gathered in Gaherin's office on 42nd Street and added Barry Rona, Gaherin's counsel, and Jim Garner, the American League counsel.

The meeting from 9:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. and when they were finished, they had their agreement.

The scene then shifted to Philadelphia where Gaherin, MacPhail and Feeney met with the owners on the players' relation committee—Ted Bond of Cleveland, Clark Barclay of Minnesota, Ed Fitzgerald of Milwaukee, Bob Howsam of Cincinnati, Dan Galbraith of Pittsburgh and John McAfee of Montreal.

Fidrych vs. Jones: Unusual Matchup

record of 16 victories and only 3 defeats this season with an earned-run average of 2.53. He is expected to be a strong shot at a baseball rarity, 30 victories in one summer, a feat last achieved by Denny McLean of the Tigers in 1968.

But Fidrych, in three months on the major-league scene, already has revealed that performance for drama and comedy combined. The "Big Bird" has won nine games and lost two with a remarkably low 1.78 earned-run average, and he has done it after pitching—and talking—his way onto the Detroit staff in spring training as the 25th and final player picked.

But Fidrych has captivated audiences more with his style than with his success. He runs to and from the mound like a 100-yard-dash man, he walks around the grass between pitches, he apparently carries on a running conversation with the baseball. And he also throws a big-league fastball, a pitch that Jones supposedly does not own.

The two pitchers wasted no time stealing the show today as the 56 All-Star players began arriving from around the country to work out under the rival managers—Sparky Anderson of the National League champion Cincinnati Reds and Darrell Johnson of the American League champion Boston Red Sox. The teams took batting and fielding practice for an hour each in the home of the Philadelphia Phillies, but by then the two hottest properties in town were Fidrych, who earns the minimum pay of $16,000 a year, and Jones, who makes about $45,000.

"I'm satisfied with the money I'm making," said Fidrych, who signed the other day with the William Morris talent agency in New York. "If I wasn't playing baseball, I guess I'd be pumping gas for $2.50 an hour back in Massachusetts—maybe $2. I really didn't expect to be here. But then I really never expected to be in baseball, either. I don't know what to think about the things that happened to me this year. I just pitch the best I can and see what happens."

Asked if his friends considered him kooky, Fidrych replied: "No, they're like me, too." Asked what he did for kicks in the offseason, he said: "Nothing, just fool around with my motorcycle, or work on automobiles." Rusty Staub, who was traded to the Tigers by the New York Mets last winter and who finished third in the public voting among American League outfielders, observed that his popular young teammate was "genuine."

"We've always known he talks to the ball," Staub said while testing the stadium's artificial turf. "When he works on his car, he talks to the car, too. He doesn't ham things up. If anything, he'll probably ease up on those tricks now."

Jones, who has started 21 games in three months and completed 15 of them, showed that he was no slouch with a sly line, either. Jones Places Ball
"My only announcement," he said, "is that I'm breaking out my fastball tomorrow. I'm not at all embarrassed when people comment about how slow I throw. If I do my job well, it will frustrate a hitter. My success is all a matter of where I place the ball."

"I have no agent. I know what I'm worth. I dealt with the Padres myself last year and got what I was comfortable with. I was sitting in a situation in 1974 where I could have been cut. The ball club didn't cut me, and I didn't forget that."

Outside of the starting pitcher, the only unusual artistic note on the game was that the baseball public had picked five Cincinnati Reds among the eight regular players for the National League. They were Johnny Bench as the catcher, Joe Morgan at second base, Pete Rose at third, Dave Concepcion at shortstop and George Foster in center field.

There was no argument about that, but there was an argument about the American League pitchers selected by Johnson, who was called "an idiot" by Jim Palmer of the Baltimore Orioles. The manager of the Red Sox finished the point, though, when asked about it by saying, "When Jim Palmer gets into the position to manage an All-Star team, he can pick his own pitchers, and I am sure he will do a good job."

Morgan, who received more votes than any other player this year, considered the impact on the scene made by Fidrych and said: "We won't be standing in the batter's box laughing. He's a nice guy. I talk to myself sometimes, but not to the bat or anything."

Sparky Anderson of the Reds, left, National League manager for the All-Star Game, and Darrell Johnson of the Red Sox, American League manager, in Philadelphia yesterday.

Players Going Back to Court

to settle their differences and report to him regularly.

"We went to Judge Carter to alert him to what we felt was a serious violation of the agreement," said Larry Fleisher, the general counsel of the Players' Association. "We felt it was imperative that he had this information because he was the protector of all the players in the suit we had instituted. It was our information that offers made to the rookies didn't comply with the letter or spirit of the Robertson settlement."

Fleisher was angered when the Portland Trail Blazers were reported to have offered Wally Walker of the University of Virginia a seven-year contract with a one-year no-out, meaning he could be cut from the squad after his first year. Walker was the fifth player taken in the draft. A similar situation involves Armond Hill of Princeton, the first choice of the Atlanta Hawks.

Several player representatives maintain that the offers by the owners and general managers are "insulting." "Boy, they sure are taking advantage of the merger," one said.

A lawyer said: "Not only have they cut the price and the conditions of the first-round players, but they are not even paying attention to their second and third-round picks."

Simon Gourdine, the deputy commissioner of the N.B.A., disagreed with the charges. "Our counsel advises us that the Robertson agreement has not been violated by our contract offers," he said, "and we are convinced that the language of the agreement permits the actions that have been taken."

Several owners, who had worked to reach a settlement of the Robertson suit, thought that Fleisher had rushed into court too quickly. "He could have warned us," said one owner. "Some of us had good working relationships with him. We could have talked this thing out."

Many owners said that unless an agreement is reached quickly, the dispersal of the Kentucky and St. Louis players would be held up and the machinery of the merger would come to a complete halt.

Alignment Approved
Before the court action, the N.B.A. owners approved the alignment of the four divisions to incorporate the four A.B.A. teams that were admitted last month.

The Nets were placed in the Atlantic Division with Boston, Buffalo, Philadelphia and the Knicks. San Antonio was added to the Central Division, joining Atlanta, Cleveland, Houston, New Orleans and Washington. Indiana and Denver will become part of the Midwest Division with Chicago, Kansas City, Milwaukee and Detroit. The Pacific Division is unchanged.

Each team will play 19 teams four times each and the other two teams three times each. The Knicks wanted more games within their division to maintain and build rivalries, but were outvoted.

The owners did not vote on a proposed 12-team playoff, in which the four division winners would gain a spot and the four teams with the next best records from each conference would fill the remainder of the field.

Meanwhile, the presidents of the Nets, Indiana, Devoer and San Antonio met in New York yesterday, and meet today with Ozzie Silns, the former St. Louis owner. Silns has objected that no compensation has been set for four of his players.

Mrs. Bower, Mrs. Young Tie for Tri-County Medal

MAMARONECK, N. Y., July 12—Two former winners, Mrs. Albert B. Bower of the Pelham Country Club, and Mrs. Robert Young of the Aspetuck Valley Country Club, Western Conn., tied for the medal in the 32d Women's Tri-County golf tournament today. Each carded par-equaling 35-72's at the Hampshire Country Club.

Leading the way into match play, which starts tomorrow over the 5,479-yard course, each player posted three birdies and three bogeys. There will be no playoff for the Kay Byrne Memorial medal, and they will receive duplicate medals.

Two strokes back as 16 players qualified for the championship flight, was Mrs. Bernard Dolan of the Ridgeview Country Club, Danbury Conn., who recently won the Connecticut Women's Golf Association championship for the seventh time in the last MAIDENBERG... But the Bean report, which has not been issued as yet, will show a somewhat different picture than that in the grains," he added. Indeed, most traders who were surprised to see soybean prices move from less than $5 a bushel last April 1 to more than $7 of late, now expect the "miracle crop" to fetch $9 or $9 before the season ends. If this comes to pass, consumers can expect to pay more for a multitude of products made from the buff-colored, pea-sized bean. These include cooking and salad oils, meat products, margarine, plastics, paints, lacquers and thousands of other items. However soybean products, meal and oil, are used, the recent advance in prices is attributed directly to supply.

Nuclear Power Producers Agree to Exchange of Data on Wastes

By R. K. McHENRY... July 11—Leaders of the world's largest nuclear power development decided here today to exchange data on about 100 types of nuclear waste in hopes of speeding the development of an international system of handling such wastes. The agreement was reached at a meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency's nuclear waste experts of each country, announced by Robert Seaman, head of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

International Paper Lists Record Sales And Net in Quarter

By CLARE M. RECKERT... The International Paper Company, the nation's largest paper-making organization, reported yesterday the highest quarterly sales and earnings in its 78-year history. Second-quarter net earnings of $83.5 million, or $1.88 a share, rose 76.3 percent from $47.2 million, or $1.07 a share, a year earlier. Sales rose 21.4 percent to $906.1 million from $746.2 million, bringing the six-month volume to $1.77 billion, up 20 percent from $1.49 billion a year ago. Net earnings for the initial half of this year, also a record, were $147.1 million, or $3.31 a share, 56.2 percent above the $94.1 million, or $2.12 a share, for the 1975 period.

AMERICAN MOTORS REPORTS A DEFICIT

$3.9 Million Quarter Loss Larger Than Expected—1977 Profit Is Forecast

DETROIT, July 12 — The American Motors Corporation said today that because of declining small car sales it lost $3.9 million in the quarter ended June 30. It forecast it would also end its current fiscal year on Sept. 30, with a deficit. The results were worse than analysts had forecast. A.M.C. officials called the results "disappointing and below expectations." But the officials said A.M.C. should return to profitability next year. Some outside analysts said the concern would probably lose more than $10 million for the full year, but they agreed that the company should be operating profitably again in the 1977 fiscal year, which begins in October.

Stocks Rise to 41-Month High; Dow Ends at 1,011.21, Up 8.10

Market at '76 Peak —Glamour Issues Pace Advance

By STEVEN RATNER... Pushed by the lingering effects of last week's positive economic news, the stock market pushed its way yesterday to both a 41-month high and a 1976 record. Despite a retreat at lunchtime, the Dow Jones Industrial Average, which opened with a rise of more than 3 points, closed at 1,011.21, a gain of 8.10 and the fourth consecutive increase. This put the market at its highest level since Jan. 23, 1973, when it closed at 1,018.66, and above this year's high of 1,011.02, reached on April 21.

Money market experts now believe that the Federal Reserve has decided not to curb money growth any further and has even encouraged growth slightly. This has been accomplished by the lowering of short-term interest rates— which always makes Wall Street happy—principally through a reduction in the Federal funds rate, the rate at which banks lend excess reserves to each other. This drop in rates—a number of economists feel it will be reflected in a lower prime rate—has also cheered the bond markets, which yesterday continued last week's advance. Lower interest rates tend to make stocks and bonds more attractive, relative to other popular investments such as certificates of deposit.

I.M.F. Loans in 6 Months Top Any Previous Year's

By EDWIN L. DALE JR. Special to The New York Times... WASHINGTON, July 12—The International Monetary Fund disclosed today that it had lent more money to its member countries in the first six months of this year than in any previous full year of the fund's history. The loans totaled 4.91 billion special drawing rights, the I.M.F.'s unit of account, or the equivalent of $5.6 billion. The previous record for a year was 4.66 billion S.D.R.'s worth $1.14 each, in 1975. The biggest user of the fund by far in 1976's first half was Britain, which drew a billion S.D.R.'s under the now-lapsed "oil facility" and an additional 700 million S.D.R.'s under the fund's regular credit facilities. The most numerous borrowers from the fund were the less-developed countries, which used mainly the "compensatory financing" facility. This provides "almost automatic" credit to make up for calculated shortfalls of export earnings from the normal trend. There were numerous such shortfalls in 1975 because of the world recession. Drawing under this facility, liberalized last year, totaled 853 million S.D.R.'s in this year's first six months, much more than in any other full year previously.

Operating Earnings At J.P. Morgan Up By 3.4% in Quarter

By ISADORE BARMASH... J. P. Morgan and Company Inc., the holding company for the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, reported yesterday 3.4 percent higher operating earnings in the second quarter of $45.1 million, against $43.6 million reported in the like 1975 period. Earnings per share, however, dipped in the quarter to $1.11, compared to $1.12. A Morgan spokesman said that this was because J. P. Morgan had approximately 2 million more shares outstanding in the quarter than the year before, or 38,616,648 shares against 36,710,829 in the year-earlier quarter. The new shares were issued last March. The holding company also reported yesterday that its earnings after securities transactions rose 6.3 percent to $45 million, or $1.11 per share, from $42.3 million, or $1.10 per share. Morgan Guaranty, New York City's fourth largest bank, is reputed to be the nation's largest corporate banking institution. In the year's first quarter, the parent company had an 8.2 percent decline in operating earnings.

United States Energy Research and Development Administration... The wastes of most concern at the conference are those that would be generated by reprocessing used nuclear fuel to obtain useful uranium 235 and plutonium from the residue. Only small quantities of used fuel from civilian power plants have been reprocessed, thus generating radioactive wastes in any country. Large volumes of highly radioactive liquid wastes have been generated at government facilities for producing the artificial element plutonium for use in nuclear weapons. Such facilities are at Hanford, Wash., and Savannah River, S.C., in the United States and at Windscale in England, Manchester, England. He spoke of "considerable pressure on us to work toward this end."

Prices in Credit Markets Continue to Move Ahead

By DOUGLAS W. CRAY... Prices extended last week's late upturn in the credit markets in quiet trading yesterday. This week's new offerings started today, which gave market participants on Monday an opportunity for additional shopping among outstanding obligations. Last week's advance in prices followed fresh evidence that the Federal Reserve had lowered its target rate level for Federal funds from 5 1/2 percent to perhaps 5 1/4 percent. Federal funds, excess reserves commercial banks may lend one another, are directly influenced by the central bank's activities in the Government securities markets. The indication that the Fed had shifted its credit stance to a more accommodative position generated price gains in the Government, corporate and tax exempt markets. The Fed remained on the sidelines yesterday as Fed funds traded throughout the day in a range of 5 3/16 to 5 5/16 percent. Last week's momentum in the Government market was sufficient to lower rates on the outstanding three-month Treasury bills by 12 basis points and that rates on the outstanding six-month bill by about five basis points. A basis point is one one-hundredth of a percentage point. In the intermediate Government sector, prices were up 2/32ds to 3/32ds on such closely-followed obligations as the 6 7/8s of 1978. The 7 1/8s of 1981 were up by about 4/32ds and raw materials, development and finance. A meeting of senior officials from the 27 conference participants ended over the weekend, reaffirming in the words of a communiqué, the "political will" of governments to insure that the dialogue succeeds. "We look to the commissions to produce concrete and equitable results in a number of areas reflecting the concern of all participants," said the leader of the American delegation, Under Secretary of State William D. Rogers. Left unsaid, but very much part of the background of the conference, was that all Western nations are increasing their dependence on imported oil as they move into an expansionary phase of their economic cycles. A brief but nevertheless strategically significant reminder of the forces at work came from OPEC's Vienna headquarters last week when Secretary General M. O. Feyide warned that oil prices could go up again, even before the end of the year. In Bali, Indonesia, last May, OPEC oil ministers, in what they termed a gesture to the industrial democracies to improve the climate for the dialogue, held prices steady in

The price moves by its packaging division affect a wide range of printed aluminum foil products that include beverage and citrus labels, soap and detergent overwraps and printed cartons. The Trane Company's consumer products division said it was increasing prices 3 to 5 percent on its residential and light commercial heating and cooling products, effective immediately. # With earnings up and inflation in hand, when will the market respond?

Respond it should. But there are five major factors that appear to be keeping the averages within a tight trading range. What these influences are, why they presently weigh on the market and how long they will do so are most readily for today's serious investor.

Still more significant is a special group of stocks, largely free of such encumbrances, which appear poised for higher levels of their own.

We'll send you our analysts' findings on these selected issues, with tabular projections of earnings and P/E, all of it part of our latest investor's strategy report. Understanding Limited Price Options

By ROBERT MEITZ

In a May prospectus filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and riddled with warnings, Milton Gordon, a 68-year-old Boston broker, describes his so-called down-and-out option, a speculation that combines the excitement of a Dutch auction with perils of the betting window at Belmont. Officially called "limited price options," Mr. Gordon's brand of stock option offers a cheaper, riskier and potentially more profitable version of standard put and call options.

Several leading member firms of the New York Stock Exchange have offered these options in the past to savvy, well-beeled customers, but most abandoned them, fearing that the S.E.C. would declare them to be securities and thus subject to registration. Mr. Gordon accepted the theory that the option contract was a security and then spent two difficult years getting them registered with the S.E.C.

Understand the limited price option, it will help to review the standard call option. The call is purchased by an individual who expects the price of a stock to go up. He pays a fraction of the cost of the shares and, if the shares rise as he expects within a limited time, he makes a big profit on his call.

The price of the option will rise by nearly as many points as the underlying shares. Under certain circumstances, shares rising from $25 to $50 will carry the price of a call costing $5 to $30—a 500 percent profit less commissions on a stock that merely doubled.

With a down-and-out option, the investor gets the same ride at a lower cost. Hence, his profit would be greater and so would be his risk. For it is the Dutch auction feature of the down-and-out option that adds risk and potential profit. In a Dutch auction, the hand of a "clock" turns to indicate an ever lower price. As soon as someone bids, the sale is made and all others are out.

Similarly, the down-and-out option has expiration prices as well as expiration dates. In short, if the stock goes down instead of up, the investor is soon down and out.

Here is an example from the Gordon prospectus. Mr. Gordon, whose firm is currently on the other side of every option written by the firm, charges no commission. An investor pays $5,100 for a six-month 10-day limited price call option covering 800 shares of XYZ, at an exercise price of $50 and with an expiration price of $46.25 during the first monthly term; $47 during the second monthly term; $47.75 during the third monthly term; $48.50 during the fourth monthly term; $49.25 during the fifth monthly term; $50 during the last month and 10-day term of the option.

If the market for XYZ falls to $46.25 a share any time within 30 days of the investor's purchase—the expiration price during the first monthly term—and he has not sold or exercised the option, he would have lost his entire $5,100. He would have no possibility of recovery since his option would have expired.

The Gordon prospectus warns that the expiration price provision in Gordon's limited price options "makes them a less desirable and more speculative option than a conventional option—no investor should count on any amount of money to the purchase of limited price options unless he is able to withstand the loss of the entire amount so committed."

The price expiration feature of the limited price option makes it more attractive to writers (as sellers). They are content with smaller premiums than writers of standard options. As Gordon & Company's prospectus notes: "No buyer should purchase a limited price option if he can purchase a conventional option for a comparable premium."

The seller finds the options appealing because he need not hold on to shares that are sliding once the option against them expires. He can thus limit his loss to 10 percent or less. The unusual expiration price is somewhat less than 10 percent in the first month and becomes less and less thereafter.

The option buyer pays even less if he exercises or resells within the life of the option. He gets back a portion of his cost. That is, the option's remaining time has resale value.

Gordon & Company writes limited price options on most issues—stocks, bonds and warrants, traded on national security exchanges and many issues traded over the counter. Investors can buy direct from Gordon & Company, or they can buy through their brokers. Brokers who buy from Gordon are given a 5 percent discount and the charge to their customers should be identical to charges direct from the Boston firm, Mr. Gordon said.

Oppenheimer & Company, Drexel Burnham & Company, Goldman Sachs & Company and a few other leading brokerage firms also offer limited price options but only to wealthy, sophisticated clients. Only the Gordon options have cleared the S. E. C. and some argue that they need not be cleared on the basis that their contracts are not, strictly speaking, securities.

Trading Is Moderate—Value Index Advances by 0.48

In moderate trading, stocks moved up on the American Stock Exchange and in the over-the-counter market. The Amex's market value index closed at 107.05, up 0.48, and the NASDAQ industrial index ended at 98.22, up 0.42.

Reliance Group warrants led the Amex active list with a volume of 137,100. The warrants of the holding company closed at 1 1/2, up 1/4. Next on the list was Circle K, operator of convenience food stores, which closed at 6 1/2, up 3/4 on volume of 87,800.

The CSE Corporation, a holding company received favorable comment in a recent issue of a financial magazine, and it closed at 10, up 1/4 on the Amex.

Hampton Industries, in the textile field, was another gainer on a report that its second-quarter sales ran 58 percent above the year-ago period. It closed at 6 3/4, up 3/8.

Fanny Farmer Off 1/4
Fanny Farmer dropped 1/4 of a point to close at 1 1/2, following a comment that a recent strike at the candy maker's plant might have an adverse effect on earnings in the next few quarters.

In the over-the-counter market the Government Employees Insurance Company headed the most active list on volume of 119,100, as it has often in recent weeks. The shares of the troubled company closed at 4 1/4, up 1/8. Rank Organisation, the big British entertainment company, gained 3/4 to close at 1 1/8 on volume of 100,000 shares.

Option trading on the Chicago Board Options Exchange increased quite sharply yesterday to 116,676 contracts, up from 94,438, while on the Amex the volume rose to 51,355 contracts, up from 43,786.

Business Briefs

U.S. Earning and Owning at Peak

WASHINGTON, July 12 (UPI)—Americans earn more and own more than ever before in their 200-year history, according to the Department of Commerce.

But other statistics from the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development say the Swiss and the Swedes earn even more than Americans. Per capita income in the United States in 1975 was $6,600, according to the O.E.C.D. survey, behind Switzerland's $6,970 and Sweden's $6,880.

The United States is 11th in terms of foreign aid as a fraction of gross national product. The O.E.C.D. reported Sweden gave three times as much in foreign assistance as the United States.

Meantime, the Commerce Department said in new figures made public yesterday that per capita disposable income of Americans rose 140 percent between 1960-1974. That figure includes inflation. When inflation is factored out, the real increase in income is 45 to 50 percent over the 15-year period.

Dollar and Pound Up; Gold Drops

BRUSSELS, July 12 (UPI)—The United States dollar began the week on an upward trend on European money markets today, and the British pound gained more than half a cent.

The price of gold continued to drop—down 70 cents to $121.85 an ounce in Zurich and 50 cents to $122 in London.

The dollar was up in Frankfurt to 2.58 marks from 2.5775. In Zurich it rose to 4.7780, in Brussels from 40.305 francs to 40.355, in Amsterdam from 2.7275 guilders to 2.7295, and in Milan from 899.20 lire to 899.80.

In London the pound's value increased by more than half a cent, from Friday's close of $1.7810 to $1.78275.

Saudi Agency to Supply Food at Cost

NICOSIA, Cyprus, July 12 (AP)—King Khaled of Saudi Arabia decreed the setting up of a Government company to supply his people with consumer commodities, mainly food imports, at cost, the Saudi state radio reported today. All of the $290 million capital in the company will be provided by the Saudi Government, according to the broadcast, monitored in Nicosia.

The company will be headquartered in Riyadh, the capital, with branches in the Red Sea port of Jidda and the Persian Gulf oil center of Dammam. Additional branches are to be opened, according to the decree.

Mortgage Delinquencies Stable

CHICAGO, July 12 (UPI)—Mortgage loan delinquencies at the nation's savings and loan associations remained unchanged in May from the two previous months, the United States League of Savings Associations reported today.

The estimated May delinquency figure of 0.95 percent was slightly below the 0.97 percent tally recorded in May 1975, the league said. In March 1975, delinquencies amounted to 0.94 percent and to April last year 0.92 percent.

ings to $45 million, or $1.15 a share. The company said yesterday that net interest earnings, principally those of Morgan Guaranty, in the first half declined to $310.6 million from $324.4 million, because of the lower level of interest rates this year.

Consolidated Income
J. P. Morgan's consolidated net income in the first half was $90.2 million, up 2 percent from last year's $88.4 million. Securities transactions after income taxes contributed $21,089 to the first-half results but had an after-tax loss of $4,074,228 in the 1975 first half.

Provision for possible loan losses during the first half was cut to $39.9 million from $38.2 million the year before. Net charge-offs against the reserves, however, increased to $31.9 million from $22.6 million.

During the half, net securities losses were $1.3 million but J. P. Morgan derived a positive income tax benefit of $1.6 million. In the like 1975 half, net securities losses were $8.7 million with a tax benefit of $4.7 million.

The company's personnel expenses, including salaries and employees benefits, rose 9.7 percent in the first half to $1.1 billion, slightly more than $100 million against $91.6 million the year before. Average net loans outstanding during the first half were $12.8 billion against $13.1 billion the year before.

Homosexual Magazines in Bids

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY Publishers of magazines for male homosexuals, heartened by steady circulation growth, are looking at national advertisers with varying degrees of optimism—or pessimism.

They know the potential market is large and contains many affluent people, but they also know that they face natural advertiser resistance, similar to the resistance that still keeps some advertisers out of Playboy after more than two decades.

Three of the magazines—Mandate, Blueboy and In-Touch—are sold nationally and display photos of males with full frontal nudity.

"Playgirl and Viva made male nudity on newsstands viable," said Donald N. Embinder, publisher of Blueboy, and the man most aggressively going after national advertising.

Mr. Embinder, who has an M.B.A. from Wharton and worked on Procter & Gamble at Benton & Bowles, ran a full-page ad in Advertising Age in April headlined, "Now you can reach America's most affluent minority."

The Male Homosexual. It dwelt on the affluence of the market and its trend-setting characteristics. A coupon, offering more information on the market, brought in 488 responses from advertisers and agencies, he said. He has just named Target Media, New York, as his national advertising representative and in the fall plans an advertising campaign to those segments of the trade press reaching the fashion, liquor and hi-fi equipment industries. He considers them his best prospects.

Although Mandate is a monthly, Blueboy and In-Touch are published six times a year. None of them are audited yet by the Audit Bureau of Circulations, a very necessary first step before approaching national advertisers.

Mr. Embinder, who works out of Miami, didn't take Blueboy to newsstands until his fourth issue—about a year ago—and by that time he had 26,000 subscriptions. Now his print order is 180,000 copies.

George Mavety, publisher of Mandate, reports that his first issue had a 10,000 press run, and that for his current 16th issue 59,000 were printed. "Our success is phenomenal," said Bob Johnson, editor of In-Touch, published in Los Angeles. He reported a sudden rise in circulation, and said that since December he had raised his press run from 34,000 to 50,000.

"Everybody's coming out of the closet," he said.

He and others mentioned the high percentage of males who read Playgirl, a magazine for women with male nudity, as a reason for optimism. Playgirl, with a circulation rate base of 1.1 million, has

Pepsi Extends Challenge to Coke

Pepsi-Cola yesterday extended its "Pepsi Challenge" advertising to New York and Los Angeles, bolstering it with independent national research that alleges to show "more Coca-Cola drinkers prefer the taste of Pepsi-Cola than the taste of Coca-Cola."

The challenge started in Texas and moved to Michigan and, according to Victor A. Bonomo, president of Pepsi-Cola, "Coke's response led us to believe that we were on to something." He was referring to a number of Coca-Cola comparative commercials that compared many things, but never the consumer preference for the tastes of Coke and Pepsi.

Batten, Barton, Dineen & Osborn has created six 30-second commercials for the New York market. All are of the hidden-camera variety that show supposed Coke drinkers taking the taste test and going ape for Pepsi. There will be additional advertising on radio and in newspapers.

The tagline is "Coca-Cola drinkers let your taste decide. Take the Pepsi Challenge."

Asked at a news conference yesterday what effect the campaign in Dallas had on Pepsi's share of the market, Mr. Bonomo said that the drive increased supermarket sales from 8 percent to 12 or 13 percent, and raised soft-drink sales generally but didn't affect Coke's market share. How's that again?

According to research, a total readership of 4.4 million, 39 percent of whom are males.

Mr. Embinder thinks a circulation of more than one million is a distinct possibility. Mr. Mavety, who is also president of the Modernism Publication Company, which puts out books on the dance, isn't nearly that optimistic. He puts his potential circulation at only 100,000 and says it'll take five years to achieve.

One of the many problems that the people in this field face in attracting reputable national advertisers is the quality of advertising they now attract. More than one of them characterized it as "pornographic."

The publication that claims to be the oldest in the field, The Advocate in San Francisco, pays little attention to national advertising because an outside expert examined the market and delivered a negative appraisal.

The twice monthly "magazine on gays" will be nine years old in September, and David B. Goodstein, its publisher for 18 months, says that circulation has jumped 25 percent since December to almost 60,000. He is audited by A.B.C. A year ago the publication ran about 36 pages per issue. Now it's up to 80 pages and most of the increase has been advertising.

"The advertisers, he said, 'are usually those whose business is dependent on gay people — bars, bistros, boutiques and travel agents.'"

A complete change from the others is Christopher Street, published here by That New Magazine Inc. It is a monthly, and its first issue, in May, looked New Yorkerish. It did not have pictures of male oudes and doesn't plan to. It's intended for homosexuals of both sexes and had an initial printing of 10,000 copies.

After Dark, with a circulation of 100,000, covers the entertainment field and although it claims that 98 percent of its readership is male, single and affluent, William Como, editor in chief, said, "We don't consider ourselves gay. We have a strong gay audience, but we also have a strong heterosexual audience."

In 1974 its publisher, Jean Gordon, put in strict new advertising regulations that, among other things, prohibited the use of the word "gay" in advertising copy.

Using Clark Gable's Name Licensing companies arrange for manufacturers to use all types or names, characters, and movies to help move products. But even those familiar with that field would have to admit that licensing the name of an actor dead for 16 years is unusual.

However, that actor, was Clark Gable, who is still popular even with youngsters because of the reuse of his 63 movies. The Alexander Corporation, who made the arrangement with Kay Gable, the widow, has announced that the name is available.

The A

What has happened to kissing? I mean just plain lovely kissing that doesn't necessarily lead you anywhere. I really love it, and I also love cliff-hanging when you just touch and yearn a lot but for some reason can't go any further that moment. Listen, I wouldn't go back to having sex considered immoral for anything and I'm all for enlightened sex books and sex research but I do think a little old-fashioned kissing, smooching and romance are fantastic. I may just start a one-woman campaign! My favorite magazine says why rush everything along? Why not stop and enjoy the journey? I love that magazine. I guess you could say I'm That COSMOPOLITAN Girl.

If you want to reach me you'll find me reading
